THE KUKLUX KLAN HYENAS.

Report of the Select Committee of Congress.

When, How and Why the Secret Order was Formed.

The Most Intelligent Negroes Selected for Immolation.

Extension of the President's Powers Recommended.

What the Minority of the Committee Have to Say.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 18.—The Joint Select Committee will, to-morrow, make their report on the condition of affairs in the late insurrectionary States. The Committee was organized April 20, and again met in Washington on the 7th of May last. On the 19th, a subcommittee of eight was appointed to proceed at once with the investigation, with authority to take testimony wherever they deemed it advisable, by a subcommittee of their own number, to be reported to a meeting of the full committee. Subcommittees were appointed to visit and take testimony in North and South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Tennessee, Alabama, and Mississippi. The evidence taken in Washington and by a Subcommittee in South Carolina, having been reported to the Joint Committee, is now submitted and as an appendix to and part of the report is also submitted the report of the Subcommittee appointed to digest the reports of the Executive officers of the States. The testimony taken in Georgia, Florida, Alabama and Mississippi by the Subcommittees visiting these States is not yet prepared and will be submitted with a supplement or supplementary report.

SCOPE OF THE INVESTIGATION.

The proceedings and debates in Congress show that whatever other causes were assigned for disorders in the late insurrectionary States, the execution of the laws and security of life and property were alleged to be most seriously threatened by the existence and acts of organized bands of armed and disguised men known as Kuklux. Inquiring as our primary duty into the truth of these allegations in those States where such acts have most recently been committed, the investigation necessarily assumed a wider range. Not only has inquiry been made as to the commission of outrages, as to the execution of laws by the superior Courts and inferior Magistrates, but bad legislation, official incompetency, corruption, and other causes, having been assigned as accounting for, if not justifying, the orders, they, too, have to a large extent entered into the statements and opinions of witnesses.

IMMUNITY OF DISGUISED CRIMINALS.

There is a remarkable concurrence of testimony to the fact that in those of the late rebellious States into whose condition the Committee have examined, the Courts and juries administer justice between man and man, in all ordinary cases, civil and criminal; and while there is this concurrence on this point, the evidence is equally decisive that redress cannot be obtained against those who commit crimes in disguise and at night. The reasons assigned are, that identification is difficult, almost impossible—that when this is attempted, the combinations and oaths of the Order come in and release the culprit by perjury either upon the witness-stand or in the jury-box; and that terror inspired by their acts, as well as public sentiment in their favor in many localities paralyzes the arm of civil power. That this organization may not be looked at in the exaggerated light of overriding all law and justice in the communities where it exists, and that the facility with which the well-disposed people of the South have adapted themselves to their changed circumstances may be seen, they introduce statements on this subject of a few prominent men from several of those States, including Ex-Gov. Orr of South Carolina, Ex-Gov. PARSONS of Alabama, Gen. CLANTON, Colonel FORNEY, D. D. PORTER, the Rome, Ga., Judicial Circuit. While there is this general concurrence of evidence as to the efficiency of the administration of justice by the Superior Courts, there are complaints that in some instances incompetent Judges have been appointed, of the numerous vacancies, the incapacity of many of the inferior magistrates, and in several of the States the Governors are charged with an abuse of the pardoning power, especially in favor of the negroes, all of which assigned causes for disorder will be noticed when we come to consider these charges.

THE HYPHENTED SECRET ORDER.

The inquiry into the present condition of the late insurrectionary States necessarily involved the history which the successive steps of have led to that condition as affected by the bands already referred to, and before proceeding to consider their present situation, the Committee trace so far as they are able to do so from the testimony and from official reports the origin, extent, purposes and modes of operation of this heretofore secret and mysterious organization, and the causes assigned for its existence and earlier actions. There are expressions of belief by United States military officers and others that secret organizations were formed in the immediate aftermath of the late war of the war, hostile to and intended to embarrass the Government of the United States, and of the States, in the proper administration of the affairs of the country. Among these were the statements made by Major-Gen. THOMAS before the Reconstruction Committee in February, 1866, and by Gen. MEADE in his official report for 1866 as Commander of the Department of the South. Neither of the statements of these gentlemen refer by name to the Kuklux Klan, but they cover the period during which it made its appearance. Its gradual development may be traced by bearing in mind these facts, and taking up the evidence of Gen. B. B. FORREST, given before this Committee. As he fixes the earliest date for the existence of the Kuklux, assigns several motives for their organization, and possesses the confidence so far as to know their signs and passwords, and to be able, as he alleges, to disband them in 1869, we proceed to consider and compare his various statements. The time of the organization is thus fixed in 1866, and by reference to the Commission of Gen. Thomas, Nov. 1, the report shows the extent to which outrage and crime were committed. The motives and means by which they were accomplished through Democratic clubs, Kuklux Klans and Knights of the White Camelia, different names for organizations above to have worked for a common purpose, may be learned from the testimony, over 1000 pages of which was taken by the Subcommittee of the House Committee on Elections in the Louisiana contested election cases of 1868. Taking these statements from official sources, showing the prevalence of this organization in every one of the late insurrectionary States and in Kentucky, it is difficult now, with the light which has recently been thrown upon its history, to realize that even the existence of the Kuklux Order has been a matter of doubt or question in the public mind. Especially is this remarkable, in view of the effects that are disclosed by some of the documentary evidence to have been produced by it. That it was used as a means of intimidating and murdering negro voters during the Presidential election of 1868, the testimony in the Louisiana and other contested election cases already referred to, clearly establishes.

OBJECT OF THE ORGANIZATION.

The report treats with minuteness on the occurrences in South Carolina; and Mississippi and Alabama, are grouped together for the purpose of showing the existence of Kuklux and their practices. With the exception of the presence of Northern men in Southern States, and the establishment of Union Leagues to influence the political action of the negroes, none of those latter assigned causes for the origin of the Kuklux were themselves in existence in 1866 when it was established. The object of the Kuklux was to oppose and retard the principles of the Radical Party as shown by the Constitution, to be accomplished by the means of terror, to be inspired with a panic, a Kuklux scare, and social instruments. If corroboration were needed upon this point it could be found in the expressions made by these bandits to their victims when inflicting their nourishments for the crimes they charged upon them. The testimony is uniform and it is "out of their own mouths" the accusing jury, it must be on the ground of their hostility to the Government, and to the enjoyment by the negro of the rights conferred upon him by the Amendments to the Constitution, and by the laws which they are intended to oppose.

DEATH OF THE CONSPIRACY IN THE SOUTH.

The refusal of a number of the Southern States to ratify the Fifteenth Amendment, and the attitude to the Government the Southern claimants have brought upon their fellow-citizens and consequences which are being suffered by Northern men and commercial men from the neglect of their business and estranged men to participate in all the movements of the year past which marked the progress of the nation, have induced many who refuse or neglect from any motive to take his part in self-government, has learned that he must now suffer and help to repair the evils of bad government. The newly-made voters of the South at the close of the war, it is admitted, were kindly disposed toward their former masters. The feeling between them, even yet, seems to be one of confidence in all other than their political relations. The refusal of their former masters to participate in political reconstruction necessarily left the negroes to be influenced by others. Many of them were elected to office and entered it with honest intentions to do their duty, but were unfitted for its discharge. Through their instrumentality, many unworthy white men, having obtained their confidence, also procured public positions. In legislative bodies, this mixture of ignorant but honest negro with better educated knaves gave opportunity for corruption, and this opportunity has developed a state of demoralization on this subject which may and once account for many of the wrongs of which the people justly complain. It is apparent at the same time that the demoralization is not confined to race, nativity or political creed, but presents specimens alike in the negro, the carpet-bagger, and the white native citizens of both parties. These remarks are not applicable to all the reconstructed States. They are to several of them. Taking South Carolina as an illustration, and it is certainly as bad in these respects as any of the States, and there can be no doubt that vacuity and corruption in the Legislature prevailed largely. There, they are spoken of as existing by men of all parties, and seem to be conceded. Certainly, their existence is almost universally believed by the people of the State. With such material as the Legislature, and such views of virtue outside as are shown to have prevailed, corruption was inevitable. We point to the results of the opinion in South Carolina in the fact that the negroes in the lone counties of that State have not been subject to Kuklux violence such as exists in other counties, demonstrates that if requires the strong arm of the Government to protect its citizens in the enjoyment of their rights, to keep the peace and prevent this threatened—rather to stay this initiated war of races until the experiment which it has inaugurated, and which many Southrons pronounce now, and many more have sworn shall be made a failure, can be determined in peace. The race so recently emancipated, against which banishment or serfdom is thus decreed, but which has been clothed by the Government with the rights and responsibilities of citizenship, cannot be—we feel, and we feel assured will not be left hereafter without protection against the hostilities and sufferings it has endured in the past, as long as the legal and constitutional powers of the Government are adequate to afford it. Communities suffering such evils, and influenced by such extreme feelings, may be slow to learn that relief can come only from a ready obedience to, and support of constituted authority.

PATIENCE WITH THE SOUTH.

Looking to the modes provided by law for the redress of all grievances, that Southern communities do not seem to yield this ready obedience at once should not deter the friends of good government in both sections from hopeful and earnest working for that end. Northern communities, exasperated by the delay and insubordination, may be reminded that the elements of the two sections are widely different, composed of those who, a few years since ruled the State, and exacted obedience to their will from their slaves, and held absolute sway over the votes of their whilom dependents, but who are now reduced in influence and in wealth by the events of war, and of the poor white, who has found himself, as he supposes degraded by the elevation of the negro to political equality with him, his vote before having been the chief badge of his superiority; of the negro, not only voting, but ruling the State, in office with, or over his former master, or struggling with the evils of poverty in beginning life for himself, after the best years of his life have been spent in the service of others. All these elements to be taken into account, and reason in discourse to which Northern communities are strangers. The strong feeling which led to rebellion, and sustained brave men, however mistaken, in resisting the Government which demanded their submission to its authority, the authority of whose belief was attested by a host of monuments, sacrifice of life and treasure; this feeling cannot be expected to subside at once nor in years. It required full forty years to develope disaffection into sedition and sedition into treason. Should we not be patient if in less than ten we have a fair proportion of those engaged in it who were armed enemies becoming obedient citizens? Should we not give encouragement to those who manifest a disposition now to become such, especially when it is that in many sections well-disposed men were deterred by fear of the power of an armed and disciplined band, numbering from affording aid to the authorities in enforcing the law, but while we make this forbearance and conciliation, fully recognizing that from far the largest part of the Southern people a reluctant obedience is all that is to be hoped for, let it be understood that less than ready obedience to the Government cannot accept. Obedient citizens they cannot be considered, who themselves complain of bad laws, excuse or encourage the masked and armed mobs that override all law. Brave and magnanimous enemies, even they cannot be respected who permit the rankling of rebellious feelings, the animosities of race or the bitterness of political partisanship to degrade the soldiers of LEE and JOHNSTON into the cowardly midnight prowlers and assassins, who scourge and kill the poor and defenseless. Against all such crime, as well as against incompetency and corruption in office, the power of an intelligent public sentiment and of the Courts of Justice should be invoked and united.

HOW TO CHANGE THE NEGRO VOTE.

Appealing for patience and forbearance in the North while time and these powers are doing their work, would, also, appeal to the good sense of Southern men, if they sincerely desire to accomplish political reforms through a change in the negro vote. If their theory is true that he votes solidly now with the Republican Party, and is kept there by its ignorance and by deception, all that is necessary to keep him there is to keep up by their countenance the Kuklux organization. Saving the rights of a citizen and a voter, neither of these rights can be abrogated by whipping him. If his political opinions are erroneous he will not take kindly to the opposite creed, when the agencies selected for the scourge upon himself and outrage his wife and children; if he is ignorant he will not be educated by the friends his schoolmasters are exiling his teachers; if he is wicked he will not be made better by banishing to Liberia his religious teachers; if the Reconstruction of the State is desired by his labor, neither will it be secured by a persecution which depopulates the workshop and prevents the introduction of new labor and of capital.

RETROSPECTIVE EFFECT OF THE ACT OF 1871.

The law of 1871 has been effective in suppressing for the present, to a great extent, the operations of masked and disguised men in North and South Carolina. Bills have also been found by Grand Juries in Georgia, Alabama and Mississippi, but comparatively few, if any, of the defendants in the last-named States have yet been tried. The apparent cessation of operations should not lead to a conclusion that the immunity would be made if prosecutive measures were withdrawn. These should be continued until there remains no further doubt of the final suppression and disarming of the war-spirit and dangerous conspiracy.

RECOMMENDATIONS.

The question of suspending the writ of habeas corpus in South Carolina shows that where the membership, mysteries, and power of the organization have been more concealed, the more direct, and, perhaps, the only effective remedy for its suppression; and, in view of its extension and reorganized of Kuklux at different times, of its extent, and power, and that in several of the States there is, at times, the Courts have not yet held terms at which the cases can be tried, we recommend that the power conferred on the President by the fourth section of that act be extended until the end of the next session of Congress. In view, also, of the large number of indictments found in the several Courts under this act, which yet remain untried, and of the evident encouragement derived from the belief that the present United States Courts cannot speedily reach and try them, we think any extension of the jurisdiction of the Judiciary of the United States, by districts and circuits, in the States shown to be affected by these disorders, or, in the judgment of Congress, will require speedy and certain action, to be administered, and have no hope of impunity to criminals by the law's delay.

AS TO REMEDIAL MEASURES.

The overwhelming evidence of disorders in the many counties in South Carolina, the Governor thereof has avowed himself as either commanding or was expecting outrages for that reason, and as member of the organization has justified their acts on that ground. It is one of the grievous wrongs of these outrages that, "out of their own mouths" the accusing jury, it must be on the ground of their hostility to the Government, and to the enjoyment by the negro of the rights conferred upon him by the Amendments to the Constitution, and by the laws which they are intended to oppose.

warehouses at Jersey City and Hoboken. As I understand your letter, an objection is perceived by you to a restoration of the General Order business to these stores, under the same management and control, and to be conducted in substantially the same manner as it was before I directed any change to be made.

Am I to regard it as an order? You will remember that this change was not made until after I had had two or three interviews with you upon the subject, and it finally took place with your approval. As in my opinion the first duty of the Collector is the custody of taking possession of goods to be sent under General Order, and as I have given heavy bonds for the faithful performance of the official duties devolved on me that by reason of the Collector's office I am in my exercise, requires me, in default of express directions from the head of the Department to which I am attached, to exercise my judgment upon this question. I say this, not doubting in the slightest degree your wishes, but, if that official duty is to be restored to the same control and management, as heretofore, that I may have from you, for my own justification and protection, specific directions to that effect, and at the same time I ask leave to put on record my own belief, that it is endangering the safety of the revenue and, adding an uneven and impossible competition to every foreign steam-ship companies or their agents the control and management of stores for the keeping of General Order goods. CUSTOM-HOUSE, NEW-YORK, COLLECTOR'S OFFICE, June 10, 1870.

SIR: I have to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 30th inst., inclosing a copy of the resolution adopted by the House of Representatives on the 27th inst., and in reply beg to submit the following statement, showing the present arrangement of the cartage business at this port. Immediately upon the receipt of your letter of the 23d ult. directing the abolition of the "cartage bureau," I took efficient means to carry out your instructions. The merchants and importers of New-York were notified by an advertisement in several of the daily papers that upon making application to this office, and giving bond in a reasonable amount, they would be permitted to cart their own goods to and from bonded warehouse. The cartage bureau was entirely and totally abolished, and has no longer an existence. The merchants and importers were prompt in taking advantage of this privilege, and up to the present moment eighty-eight bonds have been executed by importers and others, under which bonds imported merchandise is transported to and from warehouse and vessels by the carts of the parties giving bonds.

No importer has been denied the privilege of riding his goods, who has complied with the regulations by giving bond for the faithful performance of the business.

On the abolition of the late cartage system, the immediate supervision and control of the cartage business was placed in charge of the Deputy Collector of the Third Division, to whom, as storekeeper of the port, is also intrusted the superintendence of the bonded warehouses in this district. It is conceded, even by the most radical opponents of the former system, that for the protection of both the Government and the importer, a proper and complete record should be kept of the transfer of bonded merchandise by private individuals, and that none but qualified carmen should be allowed to handle and ride merchandise to within the duties had not been paid. The importance of such a record is very apparent, and to meet the extra labor imposed upon the third division by the transfer of the cartage business I have asked for the appointment of two additional clerks. The system which I have adopted is simple and effective. It causes no additional or unnecessary delay or trouble to importers, while at the same time it protects the Government. The merchant who is desirous of rifling his own goods from the vessel to warehouse, or from one bonded store to another, as soon as the warehousing or transfer permit is issued, presents the document to the warehouse bureau. The permit is compared with the list of bonded carts, and, if found correct, is entered upon the books, and stamped with permission for "owner's carts" to ride the goods described. This is a matter of a few moments, but affords a complete record of the mode of transfer and the party transferring each and every bonded package.

In addition to the eighty-eight bonds already completed, one hundred and six applications are now on file, which will be completed in a few days, or as soon as the sureties offered make their appearance and justify in the required amounts.

Many merchants, however, have signified their intention to employ the regular Custom-house carmen, finding that they can have their work done as cheaply or cheaper than by bonding private carts.

The bonding of merchants' carts is purely optional with themselves. Every application rests on its own merits, and no invidious distinctions are made, nor in any individual subject to unusual restrictions. In point of fact the cartage business, in all important particulars, is in the same condition as before the late cartage bureau was constituted. Your instructions were promptly and cheerfully carried out, and I am really at a loss to discover any grounds for complaint in the present arrangement of the cartage business, which certainly grants to importers all the privileges, both ancient and modern, that they ever enjoyed.

Bonded merchandise and store packages are as has always been the case, carted by Custom-house carmen, specially designated by the Collector, and the bonded goods of those importers who do not own or employ carts are transferred by the Custom-house carmen. I am, very respectfully,

Your obedient servant,

M. H. GRINNELL, Collector.

Hon. GEORGE S. BOUTWELL, Secretary of the Treasury.

P. S.—The rates charged for cartage on public stores and unclaimed packages are the same reduced rates that were charged under the late bureau, with the exception of the charge for cartage on single packages, which has been reduced to twenty-five cents per package. This is the lowest rate known in the last ten years.

No higher rates are charged by Custom-house carmen in those instances where they cart bonded goods for importers who have no carmen of their own.

Merchants who use their own bonded carts make, of course, their own bargains, and determine their own rates. M. H. G.

CUSTOM-HOUSE, NEW-YORK, COLLECTOR'S OFFICE, June 10, 1870.

SIR: In compliance with the request of the signers of the inclosed letter, of date of 8th inst., I have the honor to transmit to you that, and their two several letters of 6th inst.

My reason for declining the proposition of these gentlemen to allow their respective warehouses to be bonded by the parties severally named is, that the change in the conductors and control of the stores would be merely theoretical and nominal, and by no means distinct and independent of the government of the respective owners of the two steamer lines. I notice a congruous error in the doctrine asserted in the second paragraph of this joint letter of the 6th inst., to wit: "There is nothing in the law that can prevent our keeping the management of these stores with the General Order privilege continued." On the contrary, there is no question of law of propriety that authorizes a joint custodian of unclaimed merchandise with the proper officer of the Government.

I have only to report and repeat that I am prepared at any time to allow the warehouses in question to be bonded by parties who desire to engage on their own special behalf, in the business of the storage of goods in bond or under general order, not subject to the control, or influence, or connection in any degree, in an unofficial or interest, of or with the proprietors of these steam lines.

I am very respectfully, your obedient servant,

M. H. GRINNELL, Collector.

Hon. GEORGE S. BOUTWELL, Secretary of the Treasury.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, WASHINGTON, D. C., July 4, 1870.

Hon. M. H. Grinnell, Collector, New-York:

SIR: I return herewith the three inclosures of your letter of the 6th ult. relative to the warehouses at Hoboken and Jersey City.

The joint proposition of the owners of these warehouses seems to be in conformity with my letters of the 1st and 6th ult., but, in view of the statement made by you that the change to the conductors and employers of the stores would be merely theoretical and nominal, I am not prepared at the present moment to give further instructions in the case.

I am, very respectfully,

GEORGE S. BOUTWELL, Secretary.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Oct. 7, 1870.

SIR: My attention is called frequently by history and representations made by merchants and others in New-York, that great inconvenience exists in consequence of the change made by your predecessor in transferring goods received by the steam-ship companies to their piers in Jersey City and Hoboken.

My letters to your predecessor of the 1st and 6th of June last, to which I refer you, indicate the opinion I then entertained that the storage business should be restored to the warehouses upon the companies' piers.

Subsequently, as indicated by my letter of the 4th of July to Mr. GRINNELL, I declined upon his representations, to give peremptory orders upon the subject. The opportunities I have since had for understanding the nature of the business have but strengthened the opinion expressed in my letters of the 1st and 6th of June.

In my opinion, I am sure that decisive action should be taken without further delay. I have the honor to express the hope that you will find it compatible to reach a definite conclusion so that the merchants and importers may have distinct information, and the Department may be relieved from the embarrassment created by frequent appeals on their part for action here.

Very respectfully,

GEO. S. BOUTWELL, Secretary.

THOMAS MURPHY, Esq., Collector of Customs, New-York.

NEW-YORK, Oct. 21, 1870.

SIR: Three letters addressed by me to "Custom-house stores, located at Jersey City, and the "Hoboken stores" and "Thomas Murphy" whose name is at present attached to envelopes as Collector of the Port of New-York, take high rank and privilege in importance and exciting individual interest, arriving by the mails, or, as these have, in the private messenger of Adam Express, which conveyance was adopted on the ground of your dispatch, at least four days, leaving ground and six under the impression that you wished to place immediate lines and their agents.

The Hoboken and Jersey City lines, however, are conceived in consequence of the war on the continent.

I am satisfied after a careful consideration of all the facts and circumstances affecting the importation and disposal of merchandise arriving by these lines, that it is not for the best interests of the Government or of the majority of the merchants of the City of New-York, that the General Order privilege should be extended to the stores of these steam-ship lines.

The first point to be considered is disposing of merchandise improperly imported into the United States to the safety of the revenue and the security of the interests of the Government.

The Collector of Customs, who is made by law responsible for the collection of duties on importations into his district, is directed by the law to take possession of unclaimed merchandise and deposit the same in any public or private bonded warehouse authorized under the act of 1864.

There is no question that under this act the Collector is vested with the right and discretion of choosing such warehouses for the storage of unclaimed goods as may seem to him best fitted for the purpose.

These Consignees demand that the Collector shall select their stores.

For several years the so-called Cunard line enjoyed, under the auspices of former Collectors, the privilege of discharging all unclaimed merchandise, landed from their steamers in stores owned by this English company, and situated on their pier, sole stores being bonded as private bonded warehouses by GURNARD, and subsequently by FRANCKLYN, English resident agents of the line.

This privilege was revoked by Mr. GRINNELL, late Collector. The Cunard line now seeks for a restoration of its exclusive privilege, on the ground of its benefits to the importing public, and its economy to both the Government and the importers, and asserts that its rehabilitation will not compromise the safety of the revenue. Under the existing arrangements, all unclaimed goods landed from the steamers of this line are at once loaded on large trucks and taken to the General Order store in New-York, where they are held subject to entry by the importer. The cost of hoisting and carting from Jersey City in New-York is divided among many packages, and thus the aggregate cost to importers as well as to the Government which pays the cartage and hoisting on goods ordered to the Appraiser's stores is largely reduced. It cost the United States an average of five cents per package more to transport goods from Cunard's stores to the Appraiser's under the old arrangement, than it does under the present system, while to the importer, who, under the old arrangement was forced to pay full cartage and hoisting, the cost was enormously increased.

The title of Mding of the Cunard Company give the Company the right to land the goods instantly on the arrival of the import vessel, but the Company claims that upon goods so landed and deposited in their stores no charge is made for storage for the first forty-eight hours. The other steam-ship lines, who do not possess stores of their own, were their bills of lading in the same manner; but when these lines favorite lines find it expedient or convenient to discharge their vessels within forty-eight hours, they, too, relieve the importers from increased expense by paying the General Order storage and cartage from their own pockets.

The Cunard line save their money, and thus have obtained an extraordinary advantage in their competition with less fortunate lines. It is a positive fact that the Collins line of American steamers, while in existence, did not and could not obtain this privilege then enjoyed by its English rival, the Cunard line.

The safety of the revenue is next to be considered. The whole theory and intent of the Revenue laws forbid that parties having an intimate or individual interest in unclaimed merchandise should have the custody and control of the same after its landing. And yet this English line, the triumphant rivals of our American lines, demands, that to suit its convenience and enhance its profits, the most valuable interests of the United States shall be intrusted into its hands.

The Cunard stores are controlled by aliens in the employ of a foreign company, and its agents and employes, even in the very dock-laborers, are subjects of and owe allegiance to a foreign Power.

The location of these stores, situated as they are, outside of the limits and beyond the fire and police jurisdiction of the City of New-York, have increased the rates of insurance to merchants, and lent facilities to smuggling.

In strict justice to the Cunard Company, it must be admitted that it does all in its power to discourage smuggling. It is a notorious fact, however, and the records of the Custom-house will prove it, that the crews of their vessels and the employes of their stores, take every opportunity to defraud the revenue of the United States. In their unlawful attempts these smugglers have been greatly encouraged and assisted by the undue facilities afforded by the "General Order" privilege attached to the stores of the company. No foreign house, house of all England, would or dare accord to the officials of another country the custody of unclaimed goods landed on its shores.

It has been shown that the present arrangement is a positive saving to the importers. The Cunard line, however, to obtain and consolidate the influence of certain great importing merchants, have made special arrangements with these parties, by which their goods are set aside for their convenience, and the rates of storage are reduced and modified so as to more than remunerate them the extra fortage and cartage. It is natural that the recipients of these special favors should reciprocate by advocating the demand of the Cunard line; but their advocacy has only the basis of selfish interest, and lacks the indorsement of the great majority of importers.

On the other hand, none of the objections advanced against the continuance of the General Order at Jersey City apply to the present system under which unclaimed goods are stored in New-York. Any greatly reduced expense the merchandise is placed in the custody of the Collector's chosen agents in a central location, and under the most favorable circumstances as regards ease of access and protection from fire, robbery or fraud.

Loyal citizens of the United States are now the guardians of its interests, and reap whatever of profit may grow from the transaction of a legitimate business.

At this moment I learn that a new line of British steamers, the largest on the ocean, is about to make Jersey City its depot. Undoubtedly this new line will claim all the privileges enjoyed by the Cunard line, and will find plenty of advocates among interested parties.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

THOMAS MURPHY, Collector.

PHELPS, DODGE & CO., OFFICE OF THE COPPER AND BRASS, NO. 52 CHAMBERS-STREET, BETWEEN JOHN AND BEEKMAN, NEW-YORK, Oct. 16, 1870.

Hon. Thomas Murphy, Collector of the Port, &c.

DEAR SIR: At the request of a large number of the leading merchants of the City, we hand you a petition, signed by the principal Brass Goods business of the Custom-house, asking that you would carry out the decision of the Secretary of the Treasury in regard to the continuance of the bonded warehouses on the piers of the steam-ship companies at Jersey City and Hoboken.

On the 8th inst. we addressed Mr. BOUTWELL, certainly hoping that a favorable decision might be had at an early day, and, in answer, are informed he has written officially to you, and referred to you for reply.

As we know your anxiety to remove all embarrassment and obstacles from the commerce of the Port, and your willingness to meet all the just wishes of the merchants, we venture to hope you will direct an order to this matter, which will remove all more loss and inconvenience.

Begging the favor of an early reply, we are, with great respect, very truly yours,

(Signed) PHELPS, DODGE & CO.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Oct. 18, 1870.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 12th inst., relating to foreign steam-ship lines using goods upon their piers at Hoboken and Jersey City. The representations contained in your letter, that it is not safe for the Government to permit the goods intended for the steam-ships of these lines to be placed in the stores of the Collector, have received my careful consideration, and I have concluded that the interests of the Government will be best subserved by the continuance of the present system, which has been in operation for a long time, and which has been productive of no inconvenience to the importers, and which, I believe, has been satisfactory to them. I am, very respectfully,

GEO. S. BOUTWELL, Secretary.

PHELPS, DODGE & CO., Copper and Brass, No. 52 Chambers-street, New-York.

NEW-YORK, Oct. 21, 1870.

SIR: Your letter of the 18th inst. relative to the storage of goods imported by the steam-ship lines at Jersey City and Hoboken, I have received and carefully considered. Upon the receipt of your letter of the 1st inst. I directed the Deputy Collector of the Third Division, to whom, as storekeeper of the port, is also intrusted the superintendence of the bonded warehouses in this district, to submit a report upon the subject. I have also had personal interviews with the Deputy Collector, and have had the matter fully and carefully considered by myself.

I thought it practicable and safe to permit the storage of goods in private warehouses under the act of 1864, and the regulations made for the purpose of carrying the provisions of that act into effect. I assume, however, as your attention has been specially directed to the subject, I waive my own opinion on the present and submit the matter to your decision. I enclose opinions on my own summary in this case.

I could, perhaps, do any an injustice to the representation in your letter, that I do not so interpret the law as to render you responsible under your bond for any loss of goods that might arise in case of trade packages placed in a warehouse if the warehouse were properly selected under the law, and you had been guilty of no neglect in the discharge of the duties imposed upon you by the law. Very respectfully,

GEO. S. BOUTWELL, Secretary.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Oct. 21, 1870.

SIR: Upon the receipt of your letter of the 11th inst. relative to the storage of goods imported by the steam-ship lines at Jersey City and Hoboken, I proposed an answer under date of the 12th of October inst., which I now transmit to you.

I desired the consideration of it is consequence of representations made to me by gentlemen desirous of continuing the warehouses as heretofore.

I will only add now that it seems to me worthy of consideration whether some arrangement cannot be made by which the store-houses on the piers may be so placed under the control of the Government as to render it practicable to use them without opening the business to the objections set forth in your communication. Very respectfully,

GEO. S. BOUTWELL, Secretary.

THOMAS MURPHY, Esq., Collector of Customs, New-York.

THE ARLINGTON ESTATE.

Petition of Mrs. M. A. R. Lee—The Arguments Pro and Against Her Claim.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

As a staunch Republican, I claim the privilege of calling public attention to the petition of Mrs. M. A. R. LEE, which is now under consideration by the United States Senate Committee on the Judiciary. In this petition Mrs. LEE prays that an act may be passed by Congress granting to her a sum of $300,000 as compensation for the Arlington property, at present used as a national cemetery. Heretofore most persons—myself among the number—believed that this estate was owned and exclusively controlled by the late Gen. R. E. LEE; and that it was consequently a legitimate prize for the Federal Government. This impression, however, is now dispelled by the legal record, which shows that it was bequeathed to Mrs. LEE by her father in March, 1855, and that the will was admitted to probate in the County Court of Alexandria, Va., during the month of December, 1857. On the 11th of January, 1864, the property was assessed by the United States Government with a direct tax of $92 07, and subsequently sold to the United States for a sum of $26,800; but of this amount it appears that Mrs. LEE has not had a single penny. At the time of the sale the property was represented on the books of the county as being value for $34,100. The sale was held in pursuance of an act of Congress, which all good lawyers hold to be unconstitutional. The act referred to was passed in 1862, and provided that lands in the insurrectionary States should be charged with taxes, and sold for nonpayment. At all such sales the Government was to have the privilege of buying in any portion of the lands that might be required for military and other purposes. Section 8 of the first article of the Constitution delegates to Congress the power of exercising exclusive jurisdiction over all places purchased by consent of the Legislature of the State in which the same shall be. In the Arlington case, it is needless to say that there was no consent either asked or given. Since then many cases of a similar nature have been tried in the United States Courts and the Judges have invariably decided that even in the law of 1862, there is nothing whatever to compel the sale of 1,100 acres for the payment of a sum not equal to the purchase money of one acre. Of course, nothing can be done for the settlement of Mrs. LEE's claim without the passage of a law by Congress, and I am quite ready to admit that Republican legislators have a colorable pretext for not showing much enthusiasm about it. But, apart from all party considerations, there is really no good reason why adequate compensation should be any longer withheld. The original owner of Arlington, the late Mr. GEORGE WASHINGTON PARKE CUSTIS, never anticipated such a result when he bequeathed it to his daughter, and his grandson, GEORGE WASHINGTON CUSTIS LEE, and his heirs, forever. It is true that we have a heavy national debt, and many tomb-stones in nearly every church-yard throughout the country to bear evidence of the loss in blood and treasure that we have sustained by the rebellion; but, notwithstanding this, I doubt very much the propriety of revenging ourselves upon a woman, who, after all, may not even have been in sympathy with the cause which was only taken up by her husband while under the impression that his native State had the first claim upon his services. In the present condition of the property, I am free to confess that it would be very inconvenient for the Government to restore it to Mrs. LEE, but this she does not ask. Her petition is written in a temperate and respectful spirit, and, if not granted unconditionally, should at least meet with a response becoming the dignity of a great nation. AN ADVOCATE OF JUSTICE.

NEW-YORK, February, 1872.

Mr. Hawkes.

From a Lady Correspondent.

"He prayeth best that loveth best
All things, both great and small." Ancient Mariner.

The life of this true Christian is one long prayer, one lovely sermon. Who is like him? Not one. Different from all others. Love and different as the moon is a heaven full of stars. Compassionate, merciful, tender, brave, and courageous; devoting his time, his talents, his fortunes—to what? To prevent, as far as it lays in his power, the sufferings of every helpless creature! Yes, that is his exalted mission, and right nobly he performs it. Not for position, place, or power, is this one among ten thousand working. He is working for God, without profit or earthly reward except the reward of his own noble heart, and the knowledge that he possesses, more than any other living man, the love, honor, and esteem of every good and generous soul. Something almost divine must be in the nature of this most admirable man. His great heart feels for everything that suffers. Fair City, in whose mighty heart he works, aid and encourage him; cherish and honor him; pray for long life to him. Is he not your most practical preacher? You every day of his useful life he teaches grand lessons of loving kindness, charity, mercy to all things. His motto, "The dear Lord that loveth us, He made and loveth all." We know that he is not working for the sake of profit or praise; but let us give him praise freely, heartily. He well deserves all we can bestow. God bless him and every one that gives him aid and encouragement in his noble, beautiful, self-denying mission. A. J. A.

The Wrestling Tournament.

A large number of local wrestlers intend holding a tournament today at a Houston-street house. Among the celebrities who will attend is Major J. H. McLAUGHLIN, the champion of America, by having defeated HOMER LANE and other aspirants for supremacy. The Major is anxious to get up an international match, and has challenged WRIGHT and JAMIESON, the celebrated English wrestlers, to that end.

The Shooting Affair in Chambers-Street.

DANIEL O'CONNELL, the man who was shot while "skylarking" with ALFRED FARRY, in the liquor-store saloon of PHILIP HUMBELE, No. 52 Chambers-street, as reported in yesterday's Times, is still at the Park Hospital. His condition, although considerably improved, is still reported critical, but the attending surgeon has strong hopes of his recovery. FARRY was arraigned before Justice HOGAN, yesterday, and committed to the Tombs to await the result of the injuries of O'CONNELL.

Minor Crimes.

Four men attempted to break into the grocery-store No. 128 Varick-street on Saturday night. One of them, JOHN COCHRANE, was arrested and taken before Justice GOG, at Jefferson Market, yesterday, and was locked up in default of $1,000 bail to answer.

JAMES FERRY and ARCHIBALD CHEW were committed at the Yorkville Police Court, yesterday, on a charge of stealing a watch of the value of $40 from JAMES BRADY, of One Hundred and Twenty-fourth-street and Fourth-avenue.

Mr. Hawkes's Lecture on Art.

MR. HAWKES is known as an active and influential clergyman; he is also a musical amateur of no mean attainments, and the book before us is mainly a compilation of articles contributed by him to various magazines. They are permeated by a lofty, yet Catholic taste, and written from the standpoint of one who, deeply acquainted with the suffering and pain of this life, looks on music as a source of the purest consolation, and a means not only of relief, but of actual mental and emotional discipline. In a literary point of view, the book suffers from its disconnected and sketchy character; it would have had more weight as a contribution to the philosophy of music, if the first part had been published alone; but as a musical and artistic sense it is a capital book, full of ideas of knowledge, and a genial criticism on a thousand matters, large and small, connected with music, and we have no doubt that it will be widely read and enjoyed on both sides of the Atlantic. The value of a new, amusing, and tolerably just book, which deals in an original manner with the moral and metaphysical as well as the esthetic and practical sides of music, is not to be slightly estimated; for music being the youngest of the arts, so young in fact that all her possibilities are not yet developed, the science of criticism has not, out of Germany, as yet done much for her. The rationale of her existence is not yet clear, and our information in respect to an art which more than any other occupies and amuses large portions of our population is extraordinarily scanty. Few persons have read the History of Burney; few have even seen that of HAWKINS. HOGARTH's useful, but incomplete work is now out of print; the works of FETIS and BERLIOZ are only to be found in French; those of CHORLEY are but little known. Thus the small compendium of Prof. RITTER, seven or eight volumes of letters written by great musicians, of biographies, of reminiscences, of rhapsodies, with the merest crumbs of criticism interminged, are all that is generally attainable, and they leave the most interesting questions as to the nature and progress of music and the duty and interest of those who follow it, absolutely untouched.

This is the more provoking, as the very converse obtains in regard to the sister art of painting. Public concerts abound, public galleries do not yet exist; the finest singers grace our opera-houses, the best living painters, even those who are by birth Americans, withhold their pictures from our exhibitions; while we can and do have presented to us, night after night and season after season, the highest productions of the composer's art, the great works of the great painters are all in foreign countries, inaccessible to the untraveled portion of our people. Yet we possess in the English language the critical works of REYNOLDS, KUGLER, EASTLAKE, HAMERTON, TAINE, and others. WINKELMAN has just been translated by an American, and the principles which underlie all the arts of design, and the more subtle moral questions bound up with them, have become not only familiar, but fascinating subjects of thought to the whole world of readers through the illuminating genius of JOHN RUSKIN. Of painting and architecture we see very little, but are invited to discuss, to criticise, to judge; of music we can hear the very best, along with vast quantities of ephemeral trash, and we are left so completely without any generally accepted canons of criticism, that frequently the most honest thing that can be said is, "I like this," and "I don't like that."

If we were asked, what does it avail an American, living, perhaps, in a small town where there are few works of art, to read of the glories of Italian painting and architecture, and Mr. RUSKIN's passionate advocacy of the merits of TURNER, and as passionate depreciation of CLAUDE LORRAINE, we should reply that it avails much. He learns that a picture on which a man of genius has expended years of labor, is not the mere trapping of a tyrant's palace, but a benefit alike to rich and poor, and to generations yet unborn; and when he is thus instructed as to the connection between such work and those moral considerations to which he is accustomed to refer, his conception of the proper sphere of human activity is indefinitely enlarged and his appreciation of the value of life correspondingly heightened. There is an old story of a mathematician who, after listening at the entreaties of a friend, to a long and beautiful piece of music, said, "What does it prove?" Some such query, some such doubt harasses the repose of good people, who find that the more they devote themselves to music the more of their best faculties does it employ. They feel themselves compelled in a manner they cannot explain, to reject the trivial, to labor at that which is earnest, and, in short, a question of right and wrong continually enters into what at first had been regarded merely as pastime. The very prejudices of musicians, their passionate adherence, often to their own loss, to this or that school, show that to those who know and love the art, there is constant occasion for the exercise of moral judgment. We must believe that Mr. RUSKIN has done well in devoting his genius to elucidating the connection between art and morals and to enriching the lives of thousands to whom morality was always dear, but art, save through him, unknown, and his labors will bear additional fruit if they are the means of inciting thoughtful musicians to investigate the metaphysical portion of their own art, and by means of rational discussion and ingenious illustration to enable us all wherever music is carried alike in the populous city and the remote district, to judge and decide and hold fast that which is good and reject that which is trivial and sweaten and dignify our lives by a serious study of a noble art.

The influence of Mr. RUSKIN on the author of this book is perceptible both in occasional flights of style and in the essential groundwork of the argument; but the genius which in the one case has enforced attention to views both novel and offensive, is entirely wanting in the other. Nevertheless, we must allow that Mr. HAWKES deserves the credit of having fairly thought out his subject, and of having presented in a lucid manner a series of propositions by which the vague sentiments of sensitive musicians are, to a certain extent, justified, and the claims of music to the respectful consideration of grave and thoughtful persons placed on their true grounds. Music, in brief, is, according to our author, a species of language, and, like language, it is a natural outgrowth of the human mind, requiring generations of varied experience and the contact of different nationalities to bring it to a state corresponding with a high degree of civilization. As a language, it supplements and also it can dispense with spoken language; in that it corresponds more closely than words can do, not to our thoughts but to our emotions. We here take the liberty to guard our author, with whom, so far, we entirely agree, against the first objection which will undoubtedly [illegible] the idea of a state, and does it better than any language—better even than the highest poetry can do. The greatest poets have felt, and have sometimes failed in delineating a mood of mind. This music conveys at once, directly, without the interposition of words, and it conveys the train of emotions, the succession of joy and sorrow, the hesitation, decision, alteration, change of mood, variety of sentiment, as nothing else can or ever did before.

We have not space to set forth Mr. HAWKES' ideas on the connection between music and morals as we have them on the correspondence between music and emotion; nor has he so much to say, a little commonsense discourse of the whole matter:

"Morality is a quality which a work, as art, may or may not possess; it does not, except in a very secondary way, belong to its constitution. The morality depends upon the artist, not upon the art. It is, which is a good thing, the tendency of his work will probably be moral; and if a bad man it will most likely be the reverse; but you may have a work of art at one and the same time esthetically good and morally bad. It must, however, be noted that music being the strongest means of exciting as well as of expressing the emotions, it is most responsible for the production of those states of mind which musical language which are at variance with any just conception of duty and manliness. It is quite impossible for any one who has thoughtfully and sympathetically studied the different schools of music, not to feel that one style and composition of the artists neither these another. That certain methods of using musical notes are effect of, or extravagant, or fascinating, or monotonous; while others are dignified, natural or really pathetic, arranging and expressing the emotions in a true order, representing be stamped up passion, but passion as it is, with its elations, depressions, impulses, vacillations, vacillation, and infinitely fine inflections of form. Between the spirit of the musical sensationalists and the musical realist there is eternal war. The contest may rage under different captains. At one time it is the mighty GLUCK, who opposes the ballad-mongering PICCINI; at another, it is the giant HANDEL versus the melodramatic BONONCINI; or it is MOZART against all France and Italy, or BEETHOVEN against ROSSINI, or WAGNER against the world. In each case the points at issue are, or are supposed to be, the same. False emotion or elevated sensation, or frivolous emotions cause true feeling; disciplined feeling or sublime feeling. Musicians, perhaps, cannot always explain how music is capable of the above radical distinctions. Granted. I am concerned just now with the considerable fact. The distinction exists in these minds. They arrange the German, the Italian, French, and the Franco-German schools in a certain order of musical merit and importance; there is a fair general agreement about what this order should be; and, perhaps, without knowing why, an enlightened musician would no more compare ROSSINI to BEETHOVEN, or GOUNOD to MOZART, than a literary critic would speak of THOMAS MOORE in the same breath with SHAKESPEARE, or place BOUCICAULT by the side of BULWER."

This last quotation holds the essence of what our author has to say of the connection between music and morals. German music is always good. Italian music is always bad. Germany is the "true and tender North," Italy the lazy, passionate, ever-to-be-reprehended South. Mr. DWIGHT, of Boston, and all the best American musicians hold the same opinions; the rising generation is trained in them; we ourselves coincide in them; we are convinced that the temperate, disciplined, comprehensive music of Germany is infinitely higher in scope and nobler in feeling than the weak, sensuous music of the Italians of the present day. And yet, somehow or other, all this virtue is a little oppressive to us. It is irritating to find people stating one's own opinions with an extra amount of error and dogmatism. German music is to the cultivated musician the very staff of life; all his strenuous daily toils, as well as his deepest and most sacred feelings, find their emotional transcript among the varied and multitudinous productions of the Fatherland. But is he therefore to say that the music of Italy is worthless? Much as we may aspire to grand and solemn emotion, we do not feel quite sure that we have outgrown the coral and bells of loveliness and grace. Granting that the sceptre of music has definitely passed from Italy to Germany, a fact as to which there can be no manner of doubt, one may naturally inquire whether the large numbers of cultivated persons who still persist in liking Italian music are altogether fools? Has Italy done nothing in former days for the progress of the art? Is she to be deprived of all credit for the past as well as the present? Is the future to have art without beauty, music without melody? Poor Future!

It is possible to go too far, even in the right direction. If all people who like Italian opera and Italian music are to be told that they are of such low moral nature that they can only enjoy a debased style of art; if they are to understand that beauty is sinful and melody vain, then we fear that the progress of music in this country will be greatly impeded. Mr. HAWKES expresses just that wholesale condemnation of Italian music which we are in the habit of hearing in certain circles in New-York, and with equal unfairness. He places side by side Germany's noblest song, the "Adelaide" of BEETHOVEN, and "Si fosse un Angelo," by MAZZAS, a song nobody knows by a composer nobody ever heard of—and then compares the two. If the mighty GLUCK conquered the ballad-mongering PICCINI, was the latter entirely without merit? Not so. If the giant HANDEL was pestered by the melodramatic BONONCINI, the latter has left behind him some music not yet forgotten. If the popularity of ROSSINI was an offence to BEETHOVEN, ROSSINI's frank acknowledgment to FERDINAND HILLER, that "If he had been brought up in Germany he might have done something," ought to disarm us; and BEETHOVEN's refusal to see ROSSINI, when the latter went to visit him, is not altogether pleasant to think upon. We hear in the course of a season works by BEETHOVEN, MOZART, HAYDN, MENDELSSOHN, all the great composers of Germany, past and present; and then we are to compare them with the works of one Italian composer, Signor VERDI. The contrast being overwhelmingly in favor of Germany, why not state it fairly? Why not acknowledge at least that the vigorous and profound genius of Germany was molded, softened and instructed by the more elegant and classical, if less virile, school of Italy? We confess that Mr. HAWKES' comparison, in which he places BEETHOVEN and SHAKESPEARE on the one hand and ROSSINI and THOMAS MOORE on the other, is quite a little too much for our patience. If SHAKESPEARE had only written his tragedies, and had never introduced a single comic or humorous element into them—that is, if he had not been SHAKESPEARE; and if MOORE had written Tartuffe and the Bourgeois Gentilhomme—that is, if he had not been MOORE, the castle would not have been so outrageous.

This controversy of German versus Italian music—or, rather, of Germanized thought tending to the extinction of Italian music—is a very large one. Connected with it is the question whether the Italian opera, which Mr. HAWKES calls "brilliant nothing," should continue to exist; and also, the question how far the words of a vocal composition should influence the music—how far, that is, a composer is bound to conform his ideas thereto. WAGNER, as is well known, holds that every word should find its appropriate expression in the music, a theory very disastrous in its effect on his power. If, as Mr. HAWKES maintains, music is a more subtle and expressive language than poetry, we cannot escape from the conclusion that the composers of all times have instinctively been right in treating words as subordinate. The name, or the first sentence of any piece is of use, as Mr. HAWKES observes, "to set the emotions a-going." When we have said "The Star-Spangled Banner," "My Ain Fireside," "Comfort Ye My People," "The Heavens are Telling," or "Hallelujah," we have conjured up an idea and an emotion. It is then the composer's business to dwell upon, amplify and engrave the latter to the satisfaction of both. It is his failure to do this which renders it so fatiguing to listen to WAGNER's music. The Hallelujah, the most sublime of choruses, does little more than repeat in ever-rising ecstacy that single word.

As might be expected, Mr. HAWKES' observations on church music are practical, wise, and full of the healthiest religious feeling, and we regret that our limits do not permit us to transcribe them. Of the biographical section he says, "The present volume should be taken, not as a complete survey of musical art, but merely as a serious tribute to its importance, combined with a group of biographies suggestive of a few great landmarks in the rise and development of modern music." The biographies are short, appreciative, and written with a sympathy and candor as different as possible from the style of the rhapsodists or the dictionary-makers, we all know. The section called instrumental contains the most of what will be new to the majority of readers. There is an interesting account of violins and violin-makers. Evidently this is the instrument which the author knows and loves. The piano-forte, organ, and some other instruments are noticed, and then there is a most curious and entertaining chapter on church-bells and carillions. This latter term, by the way, applies not only to music written for bells, but to sets of bells hung expressly to play the music. Belgium is the country of bells. Our beloved Trinity must hide its diminished head before Antwerp Cathedral, which has sixty-five bells; Mechlin has forty-four, Bruges forty-one, Ghent thirty-nine, and Louvain forty.

The section called "Critical" is the slightest of the four, and is mainly occupied in belaboring the writer's own countrymen for their want of taste and artistic feeling. The whole book, however, with the many subjects on which it treats, and the large number on which it affords light, is a real addition to our scanty stock of musical literature, and as such will doubtless find numerous readers who, like ourselves, will alternately be alarmed, instructed, irritated and entertained by its lively and suggestive pages.

Proposed New Territory of Ojithway.

From the Virginia City (Nevada) Enterprise, Jan. 31.

The new Territory of Ojithway, which it is proposed to set off in the northern part of Dakota, will contain about 74,000 square miles, being nearly one-half the present area of Dakota. The new Territory contains a large area of fertile and well-watered lands, but its inhabitants consist as yet almost entirely of Indians. It will be crossed midway, however, by the Northern Pacific Railroad, which will build up settlements and towns rapidly along its route, and, from the line of the railroad, population and agricultural development will be diffused in all directions. The existing white population of Dakota, numbering about 15,000, is concentrated chiefly in the southern part of the Territory, its capital, Yankton, being at the mouth of the James River; and a vast wilderness intervenes between those settlements and the country, which will attract the attention of emigrants who follow the line of the new railroad.

MONDAY, Feb. 19—A. M.

The trade of the past week has been large, and in most departments satisfactory. The importers are busy in paying Customs, and in placing their Goods on the market for the Spring business, which promises fair and in the aggregate an increase of full 10 ⅌ cent. on last Spring. The Domestic Commission people are doing fully as well, and in Cotton fabrics, especially, they have all the demand that the mills which they represent can supply. The manufacturers have for some time been acting on the belief that Cotton is to range comparatively high, not alone on the lesser crop than last season, but on the increased consumption both at home and abroad. The consequence is that they are well supplied with the raw material, and have steadily and successfully advanced the prices of their Goods to more than correspond with the difference in Cotton from last year. The receipts at the Southern ports continue considerably below the previous crop, and the present difference in quantity is 502,000 bales, with about 60 ⅌ cent of the crop received. The exports to Foreign markets the past week were 76,459 bales out of 88,906 bales received at the ports, which is a more liberal portion than usual. But the exports altogether are 436,000 bales below the previous crop to present date.

The Wall-street markets for the week past present no material changes in Gold or Foreign Bills. Gold is ¼ ⅌ cent. lower, and Exchange, though at one time quite stiff, is no higher at the close than at the beginning of the week, and there seems to be a better supply of Bills. In Money rates the changes are also inconsiderable. The Brokers borrow at 7 ⅌ cent. on call loan and occasionally at 6 ⅌ cent., and the Merchants are fairly accommodated at Bank at 7 ⅌ cent. The Bank movement is somewhat expanded in proportion to its strength in Lawful Money, for while they owe on Deposits and Circulation three millions less than this time last Winter, they hold sixteen millions less in Gold and Greenbacks, and have under loan and discount nearly ten millions more. These facts might tell seriously upon the Money market but for the large sums of private banking means, domestic as well as European and Canadian, constantly employed in Wall-street.

The Stock market was enlivened by the Hannibal and St. Joseph sensation, a few days ago, but as regards the Railroad Stocks and Miscellaneous Shares generally, the speculation of the week was somewhat unsatisfactory to both sides the account. The most important decline was in Union Pacific Stock, about 5 ⅌ cent., of which 3 ⅌ cent. was subsequently recovered, and the only marked advance was in the Quicksilver Company, whose shares sold up to 35 for Common and 37 for Preferred. The Public Funds were steady throughout the week, and the closing quotations vary but slightly from Saturday week.

The weekly averages of the Associated Banks, Local and National, reporting through the Clearing-house for the week ending Saturday last, Feb. 17, compare as follows with the previous week, and also with the corresponding week last year. To which we add the Gold and Currency balances in the New-York office of the United States Treasury, at those dates respectively:

The Bank return published this morning exhibits the relative strength of the movement in respect to the lawful Money Reserve, as against the circulation and deposits, to which we add the position of the movement the week before, and also of the movement of the corresponding week last year:

The Bank reserve is on a declining movement in all departments. The general line of Deposits is down ($8,852,900), of which $6,400,000 was lost in Gold and $600,000 in Greenbacks. The Loans are down $510,900, and the Circulation is down $10,600. The surplus of Lawful Money over 25 ⅌ cent. to Deposits and Circulation, is reduced by the present return $1,850,000, leaving the present surplus over 25 ⅌ cent. $8,746,100.

The Treasury Office in New-York received during the week $3,007,000 in Gold for Customs, and paid out $370,000 for Gold Interest on the Public Debt.

The Import entries at New-York, exclusive of Dry Goods and Gold, Merchandise for the week past were $7,[illegible]139, as against $7,005,147 for the corresponding week last year. The Exports of Domestic Produce, other than Gold and Silver, were $[illegible], against $4,[illegible] same week in 1870. The Export of Gold and Silver [illegible]

The sales of Gold on Saturday were mostly at 110¾ ⅌ cent., as on Friday. The speculation in the Gold Room continues dull, and the prices kept steady by trade orders to buy for Custom-house and Exchange purposes. Exchange is steady at 109½ ⅌ cent. for sixty days, and 110 ⅌ cent. short sight.

The Stock market has been a shade weaker on the Public Funds, although the Cable quotations for United States 5-20s and the New Five ⅌ Cents from London show a steady confidence abroad. The Southern State Bonds are 1 ⅌ cent. higher on Tennessees, and 1½ ⅌ cent. better on South Carolinas, while Virginias, Consolidated, fell off 1½ ⅌ cent. The Railway Mortgages were generally steady. The speculation in the Railroad and Miscellaneous Shares was of an undecided temper. The bearish feeling was, perhaps, predominant; but most of the prices seemed to yield with reluctance, and the buying was quite equal to the offering in Union Pacific, Western Telegraph and a few other Stocks. After the late dealers the following quotations were made as compared with Friday night:

☞ ST. JOSEPH AND DENVER CITY RAILROAD COMPANY'S FIRST MORTGAGE SINKING FUND LAND GRANT BONDS,

BEARING EIGHT PER CENT. (8 p. c.) INTEREST, PAYABLE IN GOLD,

FREE OF TAX,

AND IN DENOMINATIONS OF $1,000, $500 AND $100, can be obtained from the undersigned, or through the principal banks and bankers throughout the United States.

The attractive features of these securities are recognized in the fact that, although they have been but a short time on the market, they are nearly all absorbed, and but a small amount are now for sale.

They combine a perfect security with a liberal rate of interest. This interest accounts is made light, for, and ably borne by, the Company, through the operation of the Sinking Fund, created from sales of the Company's land, which, in many cases, draw interest at the rate of ten (10) per cent. per annum. The security behind them is ample in every particular, as they constitute a first and only mortgage on a trunk line of railroad which will soon connect the City of St. Joseph, Mo., (an important railway centre,) with the Union Pacific Railroad at Fort Kearney, materially shortening the distance between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts. In addition to this, the bonds have further security in the fact that there is included in the Mortgage the Company's magnificent Lands, amounting to 1,000,000 acres, known to be among the best in the United States. The Mortgage indenture prohibits the sale of these lands at less than Four (4) Dollars per acre, and payable in the Bonds under the Mortgage, for the clear and express purpose of retiring these Bonds. The amount thus realized exceeds the entire amount of Bonds which can be issued, and leaves the road, property and franchises free.

The Bonds have thirty years to run, with interest at Eight per Cent. free of tax, payable in February and August in each year.

Both principal and interest are payable in gold.

The principal in New-York. The interest in either New-York, London or Frankfort on the Main, at the option of the holder, without notice, and in the gold currency of the country in which they are presented. They are coupons or registered.

Trustees—Farmers' Loan and Trust Company.

The present price of these Bonds is 97½ and accrued interest in currency, from Aug. 15, 1871. But they are receivable at par and accrued interest in payment for lands sold by the Company. The right is reserved to advance the present selling price without notice.

Maps, circulars, documents and full information furnished on application.

Though acting as agents for the sale of this loan, our firm buy and sell in their regular business the Bonds of the St. Joseph and Denver City Railroad Company, those of the Eastern Division (eight per cent. bonds) recently placed by us at 87½, being now quoted at from 90½ to 92½, and at ground interest.

TANNER & CO.,
Bankers, Nassau Street.

☞ NORTHERN PACIFIC 7.30 GOLD LOAN.

The 7.30 Gold Bonds of the NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD, which we offer at par in currency, are daily increasing in popularity, and the cash is in hand for the rapid construction of the road.

As the Government price of $2.50 per acre, the lands voted to the Company by Congress are worth $50,000,000, while their more correct value, taking the average at which other railway companies have sold their lands, is not less than $200,000,000; and upon this immense grant, as well as upon the railroad itself, and all its franchise and equipments, are the bonds of the Company issued and secured.

The bonds are thus a FIRST CLASS RAILWAY AND REAL ESTATE MORTGAGE COMBINED, upon property worth treble the amount of the Loan.

We believe there is NO SAFER INVESTMENT in the market, or one YIELDING A LARGER INCOME. Five-twenties and all marketable securities received in exchange at current rates.

Payrolls received from the Commissioner of Charities and Correction, for December, were audited and allowed, amounting to $77,327 99. Other claims to the amount of $[illegible] were admitted. Claims for advertising of more than $[illegible] were disallowed as unauthorized, as were many others, among them being one claim of CATHERINE BRADLEY for rent of premises No. [illegible] and of Union-place for Police Court, Civil Court, &c. The property was not owned by the claimant, but by JOHN J. BRADLEY, who was City Chamberlain, and by law forbidden from being interested in any transaction which, if allowed, was to be paid out of the City Treasury, and that of WILLIAM M. TWEED for rent of premises corner Fourth-avenue and One Hundred and Twenty-ninth-street, for the Fourth District Police Court, $[illegible], with interest. The period during which the premises were leased, and for which rent is claimed, the claimant was an officer of the Corporation, and prohibited by law from being interested in any contract under which money was to be paid out of the City Treasury; that the said Tweed is indebted to the City in large amounts, exactly in accord of the amount claimed by him.

Claims in all amounting to $[illegible] were rejected. The Board adjourned to Thursday next, until much later. After which time they became very boisterous, and for a moment a scene of the period was dramatized. Tweed (the man in the crowd) used profane and disgusting language toward Mr. GREEN, and one of these Irish threatened him with personal violence.

The utmost care will be devoted to gathering political news from special sources during the Presidential canvass. This department of the paper will be unusually full and trustworthy. Removed enumerators will be substituted in every department of the paper, and large space will be devoted to reports of speeches made during elections, or on other important political occasions.

A very full summary of news, and many general articles of great interest are published in the Semi-weekly editions, and in the Weekly edition there is an unabridged report of the proceedings at the Merchants' Club, an excellent summary of political information, and a great variety of matter suitable for family reading.

The NEW-YORK TIMES is pre-eminently a family paper, all objectionable advertisements being rigidly excluded; and it has a constantly increasing circulation among the most respectable classes of the community.

Under President GRANT'S administration, a Republican Congress has cut down taxes to the amount of $105,655,068, and will reduce them this session by $50,000,000 more—a total of $850,000,000. These are facts. Are the promises made by Democrats and disappointed Republicans worth more?

The Committee of Seventy ask the citizens of New-York to come together at the Cooper Institute to-morrow night, and give expression to their feeling regarding the proposed charter. They declare that the charter is a "non-partisan instrument, which has been framed to secure permanent results for the victory won on Nov. 7 last, at the polls." We have no doubt that the call will be responded to with a promptitude and heartiness that will let in a good deal of light on the legislative mind. The people of New-York trust their Committee. It has shown ability and honesty. Its draft of a charter is a wise and sincere effort to secure good government. It has been freely amended in many parts, while leaving its essential principle—that of proportional representation—intact. That principle is purely just, and studies only the interests of the people. It operates for all parties fairly, and for no party unfairly. Let every citizen who desires a lasting emancipation from the servitude of Ring politicians of both parties, sustain the Committee by his presence to-morrow evening.

Some interesting correspondence between Secretary BOUTWELL and several officials of the Custom-house, on the General Order business and other matters, will be found in our columns to-day. It will greatly assist in setting the plain truth on this subject before the public, and convincing them how absurd it is to pretend to make any one Collector responsible for the defects of the Custom-house system.

The Judiciary Investigation.

The Judiciary Committee of the Assembly meet today to begin their investigation into the corruptions of the Judiciary in New-York City, and especially into the misconduct of ALBERT CARDOZO and GEORGE G. BARNARD.

Judge BARNARD, the other day, remarked in open Court, that a man need not feel very uneasy about impeachment who had one hundred thousand dollars to his credit in bank. This may or may not be so. The question how he hundred thousand dollars came there might afford one of the most curious fields of inquiry to this very Committee. Judge BARNARD may not find it easy to explain the source of his occasional deposits of five thousand dollars "in bills" and one thousand dollars "in billes." But there is no doubt whatever, either in the mind of Judge BARNARD or any one else, as to the use he is ready to make of all the money he has. It is very well known that friends of these two ornaments of American jurisprudence, BARNARD and CARDOZO, have been already trying to buy members of the Legislature and members of this particular Committee. This is very well known. These two Judges, from long and peculiar personal experience, feel absolutely certain that every man has his price. They are sure that these Committeemen will sell their votes in the Legislature.

Now the State and City of New-York have long enough groaned under the disgrace of these two men. These two Judges have been using the process of the Supreme Court, for years, not to do justice between man and man, but to injure society and to deprive honest men of their liberty and property. They have held the victim, while "eminent lawyers" and vulgar rogues proceeded to empty his pockets. As to the way the plunder was divided we do not yet know. FISK and GOULD have stolen Erie stock and Erie money. TWEED and SWEENY have stolen New-York City money. Honest citizens have been plundered. Honest lawyers have had their practice ruined. And none of these things could have happened had it not been for the fact that these two Judges have been sitting on the bench of our Supreme Court. There is not the shadow of a doubt that there will be presented to the Judiciary Committee the clearest evidence of the most outrageous misconduct in office on the part of these two men. They are well aware that they are guilty, and they know that the evidence exists to prove their guilt, and they know that this evidence will be produced. They count on winning this fight, not by means of any just defense they have, but by means of the money they have "acquired." And, if they win at all, they will win by this money, and by nothing else.

Let them by all means have a fair trial when they are impeached, if they ever are impeached. But this Committee comes here to inform the conscience of the Assembly simply on this one point, whether or not there is sufficient evidence against these men to require their prosecution. This Committee is not a Court; it is a Grand Jury, and nothing else. Let it act like one honestly, secretly, and speedily. It ought not to go through any farce (as it proposes to do) of hearing counsel for these men, and allowing them to use up the whole session of the Legislature with the tricks of their own Courts. If no evidence is produced before this Committee, let these matters drop at once. But if evidence is produced, as every one knows there will be, let the Committee take it with speed and go back to Albany, have the Judges impeached, and rid the people of them forever. The plan of badgering and intimidating witnesses ought to be promptly discouraged, and in this, as in other respects, we earnestly hope the Committee will do their duty to the people at large. The one great reform, without which all other reforms are fruitless, is a reform of the Judiciary. The Committee can help us to that, if it will do its duty fearlessly.

Mr. Horace Greeley as a Political Reformer.

Everybody was, of course, very glad to find that Mr. HORACE GREELEY had entered the field as a political reformer. To be sure, the task was taken up rather late in the day, for when a man has life-long associations clinging to him it is not always easy to make a new start. Mr. GREELEY has known as much of political intriguers and intrigues as most living men, and his best friends (among whom we desire to be numbered) must have observed with sorrow of late years that his alliances were becoming more and more unfortunate. When he consented to become the Chairman of the Tammany Republican Committee, his admirers could only shake their heads, and confess that he had given another instance of his lack of judgment in practical politics. But very recently he has shown signs of repentance. A man of previously unblemished reputation was discovered taking a small amount per annum as commission on public printing. Mr. GREELEY at once pounced down on this offender, and compelled him to resign his office.

After this, no one could doubt that he was in earnest. He declared, in his usual energetic manner, that if anybody could be found on "his own side of the house" who was guilty of dishonesty, he would instantly proceed to annihilate him. Unfortunately, we were compelled, just about that time, to call his attention to just such a case. HANK SMITH has been one of his most trusty friends and admirers. He was Police Commissioner, and has even this session been in the habit of presiding over the Fenton hospitalities, as disguised at the Delevan House. This man was President of the Bowling-green Savings Bank, which became bankrupt under the worst possible circumstances. Its fall was nearly coincident with the fall of the Tammany Ring, of which HANK SMITH was an ardent supporter. That the two events had a strong connection with each other is proved by many surprising circumstances. The Bowling-green Bank had a great deal of money out on loans. If TWEED & Co. had won the day last November, that money might perhaps have been returned. But the celebrated firm lost, and the depositors found the doors of the bank closed to them. Twenty-five thousand dollars worth of City stocks cannot now be found. There were frauds in the "working expenses" to the amount of $21,012 62. There were loans to the tune of $69,023 38 accredited to persons who cannot be found. There were other loans made to friends of HANK SMITH and the directors amounting to $31,411 67. Altogether, the bank, as it shows by the results of a very careful investigation, was robbed of $203,544 79. HANK SMITH and his friends have been unable to offer any explanation of these losses. All that they can do is to repeat the well-known excuse of Mayor HALL under very similar circumstances: "I know nothing about it. You may feel in my pockets—there is no stolen money there."

Now, surely, this was a case which Mr. GREELEY, in his uncloudy sweetness and might, naturally have been expected to consider without a moment's delay. But HANK SMITH stood on Mr. GREELEY'S "side of the house." That makes all the difference. The Tribune has suppressed the most damaging facts against him, and has avoided the mention of his name in its editorial columns, except on one or two occasions, when it was evident that something must be done by way of keeping up appearances. Mr. GREELEY contented himself with making a great fuss about Mr. TREWILLIGEN. Yet everybody must see with half an eye that if Mr. TREWILLIGEN'S case was bad, HANK SMITH'S is a thousand times worse. Does Mr. GREELEY ask for SMITH'S resignation as a Police Commissioner? Not at all—he tries to cover up his friend's frauds, under the impression that the case is one which will "blow over."

Take another instance. Mr. GREELEY has been complaining, and very justly, of the constant attempts which are made to saddle the tax-payers with "City debts" which are not honestly incurred. Yet he is at the same time running up a fraudulent bill against the City for "Corporation advertisements" which nobody orders to be printed and nobody wants to read. The new Board of Audit on Saturday refused payment to many similar bills for advertising. It will be greatly remiss in its duty if it does not reject the Tribune's bills also. But this is not the point. The question is, can Mr. GREELEY consistently, as a reformer, defend the act of running up a totally needless and unauthorised bill against the City? It is a fact that no one is empowered on behalf of the City to order the insertion of pages of advertisements in the Tribune. They are taken "on spec" of getting payment, as the slang goes—and in the very paper in which they appear, much smaller bills of a less indefensible kind are daily denounced as fraudulent. Is there any excuse for such a course as this? If any of our Men and Brethren can suggest one we shall be glad to hear it. At present the circumstances tell all against Mr. GREELEY. He stands before the public as a "political reformer" only where his personal friends or his personal interests are not involved. An impartial examination of the facts presented above will convince any one that this is a very lenient judgment to pronounce upon his present position.

The Erie Ring.

It would be very difficult to convey any adequate idea of the immense injury the Erie Ring has done this country, through the deep distrust it has awakened abroad as to the ability of American Courts and American Legislatures to protect investments in American securities; and we do not propose to undertake the task. Ours is pre-eminently a borrowing people, as compared with those of Europe. We can afford to pay higher interest, and we ask for a greater amount of capital than any other prosperous industrial nation. A blow struck at the safety of property rights with us, is, therefore, one which every one must feel; and we leave each person to make his own estimate of the consequences of the Jay Gould conspiracy, and its triumph, so far, over our laws and law-makers.

But there are facts upon record which the public will do well to bear in mind, showing in a startling form the vast extent of the jobbery of the Erie Ring, and throwing light on the cost to the rightful owners of the road of maintaining that combination. These facts are in the possession of the Legislative Committee, which is considering—very deliberately, apparently, and with a firm determination to do nothing hastily—the propriety of repealing the Classification bill, and allowing the Erie shareholders to resume the management of their property through agents of their own selection. We think most men will agree that these shareholders make at least a show of claim for prompt action, and that the patient caution of the Legislative Committee may very probably not be appreciated by them so highly as by the cunning scoundrels whom it keeps beyond the reach of justice.

The record to which we refer is embodied in a petition signed by shareholders representing more than thirty million dollars of capital. It sets forth that between February, 1869, and September, 1871, a period of little over three and a half years, the capital stock and funded debt of the Erie Railway were increased by over fifty millions of dollars, and that during the same period no dividends have been declared, and no intelligible account has been rendered of the disposal made of this enormous sum. On the contrary, the statement by the Ring that $47,061,000 of that amount has been legitimately charged to an account of the old New-York and Erie Railroad Company, is not only blind and unsatisfactory in itself, but is false and fraudulent, for the reason that the account referred to was closed in 1862, nearly ten years previous to the report from which these figures are taken. The nature of the management of the road, under which fifty millions can be nominally amassed without augmenting the value of the stock, is further shown by the fact that whereas in 1867, with a capital and debt of some fifty millions, the surplus earnings were over one million of dollars, ($1,096,900,)—in the year 1871, with a capital of over one hundred millions, and after an expenditure of some sixty millions, nominally in "construction," the surplus earnings were but $113,398. The officials, who confine in their reports to the State Government their responsibility for these astounding results, are protected in their offices by a statute of the State of New-York, corruptly contrived and obtained for that purpose. Is it strange that the stockholders want that statute repealed? Is it not, on the other hand, strange that a Committee of a Reform Legislature cannot make up their minds to report in favor of repealing it?

Meanwhile, it is confidently believed abroad that the Ring, kept in power by the inaction of this Legislature, are busy in the practice of their worst tricks to turn every hour of their lease of power to account. So careful an authority as the London Times, in its city article, warns English investors of "fraudulent issues effected week after week, it is believed, down to the present time," and of "negotiations commenced by Gould only four or five weeks back, for negotiating a new form of security to the amount of $20,000,000." Is there anything in the history of the Ring to throw doubt on these rumors? And can it be that Senators of the State of New-York do not understand the incalculable wrong they are doing by allowing the laws of the State to shelter the reckless schemers? Can we afford to have it spoken of as something not at all incredible that a band of exposed plunderers can saddle an already depleted corporation (with a debt of thirty-two million dollars, in addition to the fifty or sixty millions they have already stolen, while the Legislature hesitates to give the shareholders the simple right to turn the thieves out?

Shall we Get the Charter?

The members of the Legislature have voted themselves a week's recess, and it is obvious that the delay thus secured is relied on by the opponents of the New-York Charter to work its defeat. We trust that in this they will be disappointed. If the members use their vacation, as Mr. ALVORD declared he intended to use his, to ascertain the views of the people—especially of the people who have any intelligent views on the subject—we are certain that the charter will be stronger on the reassembling of the Legislature than it was on its adjournment. If, in addition to consulting the people, the members will take the trouble to consult the charter itself, and to reflect frankly and carefully on the arguments for and against it, we have no hesitation in saying that the majority for the instrument will be more than two-thirds of the House. Some of the members, we regret to say, have not found it consistent with their other engagements to even read, much less to study, the charter. We hope that they will avail themselves of the leisure they are now enjoying to perform this simple duty. We assure them it will be profitable to them in more ways than one. It will give them, to begin with, a clearer idea of what they are acting on than has marked their conduct for the past two weeks. It will also, we venture to say, correct a good many erroneous impressions which they have received from conversation about the charter. It will still further disclose many excellent reasons for gratifying the earnest desire entertained by the people of New-York for the success of the charter. The better it is known, the better the charter appears, and no man with intelligence enough to be a member of the Legislature, can make himself master of its provisions without becoming convinced that it is a fair, honest, and well-considered attempt to rescue this great City from the rogues who have fattened on it, and to bestow its Government upon its people.

We are sure that we are not mistaken when we say that the Charter of the Committee of Seventy is remarkably free from the objections which have attached to previous plans for New-York City Government. It is not the work of partisans. It is no device to get power or plunder for the authors. It is not meant to perpetuate Republican ascendency in the State, or to revive that of the Democrats. It does not offend any sentiment, however zealous, in favor of local self-government, while, at the same time, it does not deliver the City bound hand and foot to the tyranny of a numerical majority. It is the only plan for the government of New-York that has ever even attempted to secure a representation in, and fair attention to, the various interests of the community. Other plans have sought to provide for the welfare of the City from the outside, and to set up a barrier—namely, State Commissions—between the great mass of the voters and the owners of valuable property. Others, like the charter of 1870, have sought to give power to corrupt men by the use and abuse of the votes of the ignorant and debased. But this charter, for the first time, seeks to protect all interests, and while giving substantial control to the majority, to prevent the perversion of its power by providing for the constant presence of the representatives of the minority. Under this charter we can see no reason why the City should not be as well governed as its people wish to be, nor has any yet been pointed out by its opponents. This is absolutely all any charter can do for us, and one that promises this deserves a fair trial.

Free Public Libraries.

Perhaps the most forcible argument in favor of establishing in New-York a good free library is found in the success and usefulness of the Boston Public Library. The project, so far as our City is concerned, has about it nothing experimental. Whatever doubts might once have arisen at the proposition to trust the people with books, upon no other guarantee than honor for their safe return, have all been answered by what the Boston Public Library has so nobly aimed to do, and has so grandly accomplished. After twenty years of useful life, that institution stands before us a monument of the wisdom and patriotism of its founders.

As reported last June, the library contains 180,829 volumes and 20,102 pamphlets. Included in this number are the Bowditch, Parker, Prince, Ticknor and Sumner Association Libraries, which, in addition to the 26,000 books originally contributed by JOSHUA BATES, have all come to the institution by gift. The growth of the library has been largely assisted by the public spirit so characteristic of Boston. Of the books now on the shelves, forty-five per cent have been presented to the institution, and a large proportion of the 20,000 volumes received through this channel of generosity are among the most valuable in the collection. The managers have added by purchase 109,000 books, at the average rate of 5,000 per annum; although during the past six years these purchases have averaged 7,000 books a year. As an indication of the extent to which a personal record is felt by the citizens toward the institution, it may be stated that the donors last year were 404 in number, and their contributions aggregate 9,750 volumes and 12,326 pamphlets. The daily ordinary expenditure for the maintenance of the library is $20,000, the interest of which is alone expended. This sum is made up of the donations of JOSHUA BATES, $10,000; JOHN F. BRAZIER, $1,000; Franklin Club, $1,000; Amory Lawrence, $10,000; JONATHAN PHILLIPS, $20,000; and MARY P. TOWNSEND, $4,000. In addition to the interest of the endowment fund, $7,500 was appropriated from the City Treasury for the purchase of books, and thus the money expended in this direction in 1871 amounted to $12,109 02. The periodical department of the library has always been made a feature, and not only is the reading-room exceptionally attractive by the variety and richness of the contents of its tables, but the shelves of the library proper are wonderfully well filled besides. No less than 374 distinct periodicals are supplied to the frequenters of the reading-room, which is an increase of seventy over the supply in 1870. The daily average of readers is 600, and the yearly aggregate 180,000. Besides the 374 periodicals mentioned, there are seventy-seven duplicates of the most popular ones taken for the better convenience of readers.

Last year the library was open to the public 307 days, the Bates Hall, or Reference Library, being accessible ten hours a day; the lower hall, or Circulating Library, eleven hours, and the reading-room thirteen hours daily. The number of persons holding cards entitling them to the use of the library is 32,340. It should be stated that any one who registers his or her name and address, and can give a single reference, may procure a card. The records show that last year the issues of books have been as large as 1856 in a single day, and the daily average issues were 985. The total issues for the year, including the East Boston Branch, were 322,445. These figures exclude all reference to the enormous use of books within the library walls. When it is considered that the lending collection comprises about thirty thousand volumes, or about one-sixth of the whole library, (although some of the Bates Hall books are also allowed to be taken home, to the extent of say ten thousand volumes more,) it will be seen that each book would appear to be in use eight times during the year. Often the delivery-room is thronged with applicants. The greatest number of books are issued in March, (24,258,) and the smallest number in July, (14,178.)

The administration of this great institution is admirable in all its details. Under Mr. JUSTIN WINSOR, the accomplished Superintendent there are nine different departments, each having a special force, and together giving regular employment to fifty-four persons, more than thirty of whom are ladies. Then, too, the Police of the city are at the command of the Institution, for the recovery of missing books or the supervision of recusant ticket-holders. The cost of all this administration during the last fiscal year was $70,443 70, in which sum is included, however, only $20,191 for salaries, the remainder being expended for purposes connected with the maintenance, furnishing, cataloguing, binding and other library necessities. All but about $6,000 of this money was supplied by the City.

Of the 293,700 volumes taken from the main library for home use, only thirty-nine were lost. This would be one for every 7,531 books lent out. Eighteen thousand and seven hundred books had to be sent for by notice, having been retained longer than the rules permitted, and of these 17,856 were returned within a week, leaving 844 to be sent for by special messengers, and these last were all recovered except the thirty-nine mentioned as lost. In these figures we have a conclusive denial of the proposition that the people cannot safely be trusted with the treasures of a free library. But even this ratio of loss is improved upon in Liverpool, where last year only one book was lost to every 36,600 lent out.

Considering the details given above, is it not much to be deplored that New-York should be deprived of the advantages of such a means of popular education as a Free Public Library?

The Copyright Question Once More.

As one result of the discussion before the Library Committee of Congress, the representatives of the International Copyright Association accepted as a rider to their bill the modification that a foreign author taking advantage of it should contract with an American publisher to manufacture his book in this country, and this concession has brought down upon those who assented to it the wrath and indignant repudiation of the reputed newspaper organs of the Association. Now if the publishers will denounce as unworthy representatives the gentlemen who, after having been authorized to take a carefully-matured bill to Washington, deliberately threw it overboard and adopted a very different one, we shall have a lively time again, and the interest in the question may thereby be spasmodically revived. This so-called "Publishers' Committee," however, might plead the defense that as their bill did not receive a majority of the votes of those present at the meeting at which it was finally adopted, it was not the sense of that meeting, and that they were at liberty to take any course of action they thought proper. Whether this line of argument might not be carried to the point of demonstrating that the Committee had no right to go to Washington to represent—if we use the publishers, and that the few who voted for the "bill" furnish the latest modern parallel to the "Three Tailors of Tooley-street," we shall not now undertake to say. Certainly, there can be no question that in tacking on their rider to the Authors' bill this Committee succeeded most admirably in thrusting into greater prominence their own absurd and impracticable theory of international copyright. Who, for instance, is to decide upon the qualities necessary to constitute "an American publisher?" The original bill described him as "a citizen of the United States," but even this limitation, or definition, is dropped, and the natural inference is that the manager of the branch of an English house may in some contingencies be regarded as an "American publisher." Then, again, who shall decide as to the precise application of the limitation "to manufacture the book in the United States?" Does this prohibit the use of foreign ink in printing, of foreign rags in paper-making, or of foreign cloth in binding? And why is this construction of the clause any more absurd than to suppose that it is only intended to exclude foreign paper after it is manufactured, and foreign stereotypes or electrotypes? As it now stands, either clause of this bill is sure to kill the other. The British Government would never reciprocate legislation which not only discriminates against, but absolutely excludes a large and very important class of their own manufactures from this market. As soon as American authors become aware that this measure may be made the cover for granting rights to their British brethren without securing any for themselves, they will at once become its most bitter antagonists, and clamor for the defeat of the bill far more emphatically than they have ever asked for the passage of one.

The fact that the only definite measure evolved from all this discussion, and brought before Congress, embodies such manifest absurdities, illustrates most forcibly the practical difficulties which stand in the way of any legislation upon this subject. There is a proposition bearing upon the question floating through the newspapers, and which, as it has received the quasi endorsement of so respectable an authority as the Nation, deserves consideration. It is to the effect that any publisher may reprint the work of a foreign author who shall pay said author, say five per cent. copyright—or, perhaps, we should state it differently and a little more strongly, that no publisher can reprint the work of a foreign author unless he pays him a certain percentage on the sales. There is an absurdity in this proposition which is very obvious, yet the principle on which it is based is capable of such wide application that perhaps publishers themselves might be induced to indorse it if they could be assured that it could be applied with rigid impartiality to others besides themselves. The proposition proceeds, of course, on the supposition that, as the publisher of the work of a foreign author realizes benefit from its sale, he is in justice bound to share his profits with the author. But the reader of the reprinted book also realizes benefit from its perusal, and very often, indirectly, pecuniary profits as well. By the same argument, therefore, he should be compelled to pay a tax to the publisher. The purchaser of the reprinted book does this by paying the price fixed by the publisher; but the one who does not buy, but borrows the book, pays nothing to the publisher, and to a certain extent, therefore, he is quite as dishonest as the publisher who reprints without paying anything to the foreign author. Legislation precisely similar in character might be applied to the one who borrows his neighbor's newspaper, and thus avoids recognizing the rights of the publisher and editor, whose outlay of money and whose intellectual labors he enjoys. Since a great moral principle is here involved, let us have only that legislation which shall deal equal justice to all classes. If, as is reported, Senator SHERMAN favors this solution of the international copyright question, we trust that when he comes to frame his bill he will carefully heed these suggestions.

Before the present discussion over international copyright passes over, we feel in justice bound to make one point as regards our American publishers. They have shown, as we have stated previously, a sincere and honest desire to recognize the rights of British authors, and to the fullest extent, if it can be done without at the same time conceding privileges to British publishers which they can neither justly claim nor expect. They are prepared to negotiate with the foreign author, and that the foreign author is prepared to negotiate with them is evident from the admirable memorial addressed to Earl GRANVILLE by Sir JOHN LUBBOCK, J. A. FROUDE, and others. But the English publisher stands between the English author and the American publisher, and will consent to no arrangement which interferes with the extension of his copyright over this market. He and he alone, therefore, should be held responsible for a dead-lock in this vexatious controversy, and every means possible should be used to force home upon him the fact. American publishers have very nearly made themselves ridiculous, and have certainly laid themselves open to serious misapprehension, through endeavoring to solve the difficulty by legislating the English publisher out of this market. The attainment of that result by such a method is simply impossible, and every effort of the kind is sure to terminate, as this has done, in a reductio ad absurdum in one direction or another. It may be that the English author can bring a pressure to bear upon his publisher which shall compel him to recognize the facts of the situation, and even to acknowledge that there is more justice in the charge of greed against him than there is in that of jealousy against the American publisher. If the English publisher cannot be brought to his senses in this way, the English author may have to wait for a satisfactory settlement of the question until American publishers are prepared "to carry the war into Africa," and to meet English publishers on their own ground—then, perhaps, each will recognize the fact that the other has rights that deserve to be respected. If any are so impatient as to consider this too long a postponement of the matter, perhaps they will accept the suggestion to let the matter lie over until we see the result of the Geneva Conference. Then, possibly, it may not be worth while to discuss it at all.

MINOR TOPICS.

Do not fail to attend the public meeting at Cooper Institute to-morrow night. It is called by the Committee of Seventy, who have worked hard for the public interests, and now require a display of the public support. It is the smallest acknowledgment of their services which can well be made. The charter drawn up by the Committee is by no means free from danger, and a good crowding meeting to-morrow night will give it a lift along a rough road. If the attendance is small, the enemies of the charter will mention it as a proof that the public take no interest in reform. Let all friends of good government attend the meeting, and cheer their representatives on in a good work.

A report from the Kuklux Committee will be found in this morning's TIMES. It sets forth the conclusions of the Committee from the voluminous testimony which has been taken by it. It especially relates to the origin, motive and extent of the secret organizations in the South for intimidating voters. Those who believe that these organizations were only innocent social societies, or else combinations to resist bad government, will do well to consider this report.

An enterprising young medical man at St. Catherines, the Canadian Winter quarters of the SWEENY family, has succeeded in causing quite a stir among his fellow-practitioners, by the introduction of what is known as the Chinese system of payments for attendance. He agrees to visit each family, when required, at the lump sum of five dollars for the entire year. It appears there are some two thousand families in St. Catherines, which, at five dollars per family, would yield ten thousand dollars a year to any one fortunate, or unfortunate, enough to secure the whole. But it so happens that there are twenty-two doctors to share this amount, so that it would not—in the event of an equal division—give more than about four hundred and fifty-four dollars and fifty-four cents to each. The fact that "Ring" thieves find it comfortable to drag through the weary months of Winter at St. Catherines, is good evidence that it cannot be a very cheap place to live in. We are, therefore, inclined to think that, under the new plan, some of the twenty-two are likely to be sadly out at elbows before the end of the first year.

The Legislature of Pennsylvania has at present under consideration a bill providing for the establishment of a Labor Bureau, to be under the superintendence of a competent officer, whose duty it shall be to make a thorough inquiry into the condition of labor throughout the State, and present an annual report showing how far the employment system, and the combinations and strikes resulting from it, affect the permanent prosperity of the commonwealth. For the performance of this service the salary is not to exceed $2,000. Now there is no State in the Union that has stood as much in need of just such a bureau as the one proposed. Its labor interests have been so notorious for bad management that strikes have been looked for, and have occurred, with as much regularity as the changing of the seasons—and all, we have no doubt, owing to the lack of judicious legislation. The most important objection to the present bill is that it fixes the salary of the Commissioner too low to insure the selection of a man with the intelligence necessary to fit him for the position; and it makes no provision whatever for incidental expenses. The mining inspectors, who hold their appointments from the Legislature, have shown, by their lamentable ignorance, that good men cannot be procured for important offices, unless it is made an object to them to act honestly; and anybody who has an idea of the expenses of traveling, and the cost of living at home, must see how utterly insufficient $2,000 a year would be for such a purpose.

The English Press is discovering that even the question of the American "case" can have two sides. In reviewing the British case, the Pall Mall Gazette calls attention to the fact that the British Commissioners were warned that claims for indirect damages existed and would be urged in case of the failure of a proposition to pay "in lump." It also points out that the British "case" puts forward an interpretation of the three rules adopted in the treaty, which looks very like shirking their application. The language of the case is:

"Accepting the rules sincerely and without reserve, her Brittanic Majesty's Government will assume (as is implied in the terms of that article) that they are to be construed with reference to, and in connection with, that long-established body of international rules and usages which was and is still common to Great Britain and the United States with other civilized peoples."

And, moreover:

"By Her Brittanic Majesty's Government, as well as that of the United States, they are believed and intended to be not at variance but in substantial accord with the general principles of that system by which both Powers alike hold themselves bound, after the decision of this case, to preserve sacred and inviolate, and from the dominion of which neither of them proposes to withdraw the questions that have unhappily arisen between them."

If this is the fact, what was the necessity of Great Britain's specially stating that that Government did not regard these rules as expressing the principles in force at the time the Alabama was fitted out?

A remarkable case of proving identity and recovery of property occurred about 1825, in the County of Cornwall, England. A young gentleman named BYMONS, articled to a solicitor, fell desperately in love with a girl in very humble life. His relations vehemently opposed the connection, and he suddenly disappeared, and was never during life heard of more, either by them or "the girl he left behind him." His elder brother succeeded to the family estates, and died unmarried, when his sisters took possession of the property. Suddenly a young man turned up, who claimed it as son of the man who had disappeared forty years before. He had gone to Liverpool, married and died. At his death his family learned for the first time his connection with Cornwall—the articles of clerkship and other documents settled all doubt as to identity, and the son was in 1829 in enjoyment of the manor-house and estates.

Share an hour to-morrow evening for the meeting at the Cooper Institute. If you want to see a steady representation of local government, go and support the nonpartisan and well-considered Charter of the Committee of Seventy. Patent you did your duty last November. Do not lose the fruits of your victory now.

Sunday Services for Homeless Men.

A numerous company of street boys attended the meeting held last night for their benefit at the Bevington-street Lodging-house. One would scarcely recognize in the assembly of quiet, attentive listeners at these services on Sunday evenings the wild and naked young fellows, who rush along the streets with blacking-boxes or bundles of newspapers under their arms. They are required, on entering the house, at night, to divest themselves of their shoes and coats, which are stowed away in closets provided for the purpose. They are then sent to the bathroom where they must thoroughly wash themselves, after which many have recourse to a supply of clean underclothing. Then they go to supper, an abundant supply of bread and butter, pie and cake, all for five cents. With such a preliminary the boys are in a fit condition to attend their Sunday meetings, which are always interesting. The exercises last night were conducted by JOHN CHARLES BROWN, Esq.

A FEW EXAMPLES OF PETTY LARCENY.

If grand larceny has had a free reign in New-York and upon the canals, petit larceny has enjoyed its privileges in many quarters where least suspected. Controller HOPKINS, during the brief period in which he has stood guard over the Treasury at Albany, has had a busy time in stopping leaks in a miscellaneous kind of way, to say nothing of the weightier matters which have been crowded upon his attention. We are enabled to cite a few instances in which he has already done the State some service, and which give promising tokens of future usefulness. For example, a member of the military staff of Gov. HOFFMAN, not long since, sent in a bill to the Controller's office for allowance and payment, couched in somewhat the following terms:

The State of New-York:

To ——— Dr.

Dec. 31, 1871.—To paid for board at the Hotel thirty-one days, at $5 ..... $155 00
To carriage hire same time 195 00
To Contingent expenses, servant, &c. 127 50
Total $517 50

This is no suppositious case. An account very similar to the foregoing, except that it was for a sum fifty per cent. larger, was presented to the Controller with a demand for its payment in full. It is not reasonable to suppose that such a bill would have been offered if the custom of paying them had not been established. Mr. HOPKINS declined to pay this one, however. It was obviously overcharged, and was not sufficiently precise in detail. The person claiming payment lived in the place where he professed to be boarding, at a hotel, at this extravagant rate. He finally withdrew it, and submitted another for about half the amount, which was paid.

Another bill, recently emanating from the Banking Department, was offered at the Controller's office, which ran somewhat in this wise:

State of New-York:

To ——— Dr.

Jan., 1872—To expenses to New-York and back $35 00
To expenses to New-York and back 20 00
Total $150 00

In this instance the bill amounted to a little more, but was under $200. It consisted of the two items, just as they are given here. The Controller could not credit such an account. It was extravagant, and wantling in detail. The banking functionary considered himself an ill-treated person, and withdrew, indignant and chafing. Heafterward served the Controller with a note from Judge ALLEN, former Controller, saying that he thought the bill a proper and valid one. However it may have been considered in his time, Controller HOPKINS remained firm, and relied upon the following provisions of the act of 1871 for his justification:

"The Controller shall not draw his warrant for the payment of the several amounts hereto-fore named as appropriated, &c. till the person demanding the same shall present to him a detailed statement in items of the same; and if such account shall be for services, must show when, where and under what authority they were made; if for expenditures, when, where and under what authority they were made; if for articles furnished, when and where they were furnished, to whom they were delivered and under what authority; and if the demand shall be for traveling expenses, the account must specify the distance traveled, the place of starting and destination, the duty or business the date and items of expenditures. All accounts in discretion of the Controller must be verified by an affidavit to the effect that the account is true, just and correct, and that no part of it has been paid, but is actually, justly due and owing." [See App. Act of 1871, p. 1,615.]

Whether under these restrictions a public officer who travels upon a railroad pass can conscientiously render an account for railroad fare as paid, we leave for nicer casuists to determine. In this case we have only to add that the matter remains as "unfinished business."

In still another instance which came under the Controller's scrutiny, charges were made for expenses to Syracuse and back to Albany, as occurring about the close of the month, stated in gross and for one item, and again for expenses to Rochester and back as occurring in the first days of the ensuing month—the two items amounting to something like $150. The fact was, however, that no more than one trip was made, the departure from Albany being taken in the last days of one month and the return being embraced in the first days of the succeeding month. This was the foundation for an account charging expenses to Syracuse in January and to Rochester in February. But the bill was deficient in other respects, not being in compliance with the law as above quoted.

Of course the present Controller pays no such bills as these. He understands his duty better. But does not their bold presentation at his office afford the strongest presumption that such bills have heretofore passed unchallenged, and that under the late retiring administration usage had begotten a system of allowing fictitious and extravagant charges to a large extent, and in defiance of the plain provisions of the statute?

In 1869 an act passed the Legislature to establish a convict "Reformatory" in the Sixth Judicial District, which was finally located at Elmira. In that year $75,000 was appropriated for buildings, &c., and the year after $200,000 more. Five Commissioners were appointed by Gov. HOFFMAN to superintend the construction. Since Controller HOPKINS came into office the following bill was presented to him, with a requisition for a warrant for its payment:

State Reformatory at Elmira,
1871. To Hunter, Smith & Spencer, Dr.
Nov. 28—To Commissioner's table $275
To engineer's table 20
To 1 Secretary's desk 175
To 1 Treasurer's desk 125
To 1 Superintendent's desk 125
To 4 swivel chairs 120
To 6 chairs, $20 each 120
To 2 lounges, $100 each 200
To 1 lounge 75
To 1 round-table 75
To 1 wardrobe 150
To 6 cane office chairs 17
Total $1,182
Boxing and packing 60
Audited—F. H. Atkinson, A. H. Miller $1,242

No buildings have yet been completed at this "Reformatory," (which thus belies its name,) and only a single plain room in a building adjacent to its site is used by the Commissioners. It is useless to observe that no such account for purchases was approved by the Controller.

The monthly requisitions for supplies at the several State Prisons exhibit very marked discrepancies. The agent at Auburn in January called for 10,000 pounds of beef, at five cents per pound. The price to be paid at Clinton was a little higher; at Sing Sing, 8,000 pounds were wanted, at ten cents per pound. The number of prisoners at Auburn is between 1,000 and 1,100; at Sing Sing the number is fifty to seventy-five more.

A more remarkable example of overdrawing has been furnished by Justices BARNARD and TAPPEN, of the Second Judicial District, some time prior to and including 1869, the Justices of the Supreme Court in this district, outside of Kings County, were paid under a law passed for that purpose, in addition to their regular salaries, the sum of $5,000, making $6,000 per annum. By the provisions of chapter 686, of the laws of 1869, the salaries of the Judges of the Court of Appeals was fixed at $10,000, and in view the Constitutional restriction relative to an increase of salaries during the term for which a Judge was elected was removed, as contemplated by a vote of the people, than the Justices of the Supreme Court were to receive the same amount, $10,000. The limitations was made void, and all the Judges were placed, in plain intention of the law, on the same footing. But the Judges above named put a different construction upon the law, and continued to claim the $5,000 addition, and strangely enough it has been paid by the two late Controllers. This gave these two Judges $8,500 per annum for two years past, while all the other Judges in the State received only $6,000. Since the year 1872 came in, these two Judges have drawn for a quarter's salary, extra, $625, which Controller HOPKINS declines to allow. This decision of the Controller has the sanction of the Attorney-General, who, we understand, is clearly of opinion that the Justices in question are liable to the State for the amounts of their overdrafts in 1870 and 1871, and that he intends to bring suits for the recovery of the same.

We have thus recapitulated enough to show the delicate circumstances by which the chief fiscal officer of the State finds himself surrounded, in consequence of the practices of his immediate predecessors—we might say by their loose construction or disregard of the law—and enough to indicate that in Commissioner HOPKINS the people have secured an officer who at least begins his official term by a fearless and faithful performance of his duty. We also show how extravagance and corruption have penetrated into the subordinate departments of the Government under the vague and lax practices of the Administration lately retired, and how important it is that the people should unite in the most vigorous efforts to replace corrupt officials with incorruptible ones, and to sustain them in what must prove an Herculean task in clearing a worse than Augean stable.

OUR CORRUPT JUDICIARY.

Programme for the Investigation by the Legislative Committee—Specific Charges to be Made by the Bar Association.

As will be seen by the following particulars and resolutions, the Judiciary Committee which begins today the investigation of the charges against Judges BARNARD, CARDOZO, INGRAHAM and MCCUNN, have agreed upon a specific and tolerably decisive programme as to how the investigation is to be conducted. It seems to have been at first the desire of the Bar Association to omit the name of Judge MCCUNN from the list of the accused, in order to use him as State's evidence against the others. The opposition of many of the Bar Association members, however, so strong that this intention was abandoned, and Judge MCCUNN is to be included among the accused, one of the charges against him being that when acting as receiver in the Bininger Bankruptcy case, he used the money in his charge ($70,000) in putting up buildings. The following are the resolutions of the Judiciary Committee, in regard to the conducting of the investigation:

Resolved, That the Committee meet at 4 P. M. on Monday next (to-day), at the Fifthavenue Hotel in the City of New-York.

Resolved, That the Committee issue subpœnas to secure the attendance of the witnesses.

Resolved, That notice in writing be given the parties accused, and that an opportunity be given them to be present.

Resolved, That the Bar Association of the City of New-York be requested to present the Committee a concise statement of the charges they make against the parties named, and upon which they propose to offer proof, which charges shall be specifically and separately stated as to each of said parties, and shall particularly set forth the precise nature of the charge, and specify the time and place constituting the misconduct and abuse alleged.

The Committee, as will be seen by the foregoing, omit to state whether the parties making charges shall do so under oath, but it is to be presumed they will.

The New-York Tribune and Reform.

From the Grand Army Journal.

Time sadly interferes with what we had learned to respect. Before the war the Tribune had earned a solid reputation, and was welcomed in families where the prosperity of the country was a cherished idea. The Tribune in anti-slavery harness did well. Its editor-in-chief had great prominence. The subject was an all-absorbing one, and every man who could write an article or make a speech thereon acquired a certain fame. While the Tribune thus toiled its stability and heartiness were admitted. But on the outbreak of the rebellion the question of freedom for the slaves became one of many, though it was clear that slavery was designed as a result of the war. The most pronounced advocates of liberty, if their leadership was to be retained, had to show their qualifications. The time which tried men's souls was that which followed the first shot fired at Fort Sumter. Then, if ever, the people needed counsel. So prominent a journal as the Tribune should have given the most emphatic sound. To preserve the Union was the first thought of patriots. Volunteers appeared upon the scene ready for service, while the Tribune was paltering, with the idea of avoiding bloodshed. And instead of denouncing treason with the vim of its anti-slavery fervor, it simpered about letting our war-worn sisters go in peace, and the secession of the cotton States.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN will live in the memory of men when the Tribune's rancor is forgotten. He seemed as if specially raised up for the work he had to do. On assuming the duties of his office he had to contend from he sacrifice. He was often laboring for the best interests of his country when others deserted. The people understood him. They appreciated his incorruptibility and large-hearted sympathy, and he felt he had secured a strong hold upon their affections. This gave him power, and enabled him to do much which he seemed to do little. But he had enemies. Few good and great men are without them. His bitterest foe, perhaps, at the end of his first term, was the editor-in-chief of the Tribune. The people, however, re-elected him in spite of the vituperation of men who ought to have been his friends, and mourned sincerely his tragic and unexpected death. History has assigned him his place in the ranks of patriotic rulers. But the marvel is that the tongue of him whose pen snapped to crush the hope of Mr. LINCOLN to bring the war to a close refuses the charges against him in lyceum lectures.

Something seems to have unhinged the judgment of the Tribune and sent it into chaos. Outrageous villainy is discovered in the City of New-York, almost within the shadow of the Tribune's dome. But the voice that praised LINCOLN now had nothing then to denounce. Bogus collie enterprise is a sorry substitute for political stability. What a man knows about farming is of no consequence compared with what he knows about Tammany thieves, but refrained to tell. Western men are purely Norwegians. They have little to be shown how to raise turnips and squashes at an expense of $5 apiece, but they would have been tickled to learn why the City Farmer left Tammany to be overthrown by others during his absence. They would even have dispensed with the lecture and allowed the lecturer to return to his duties, had he been so disposed. They felt assured, however, that the cause of honesty would not suffer; so the farmer was instituted to Mean while, the New-York frauds appalled the world by their magnitude, and injured the national credit. So far as the Tribune was concerned in the early part of the contest, the Ring thieves clung to their offices with unabated ardor, and all through the fight Ring advertisements flooded its columns. Other affairs of course had to be dealt with. The President, the Tribune "had helped to elect" was very obnoxious to it. If TWEED's name rarely appeared, attacks upon GRANT were frequent. The scent after fraud was lost in the pursuit of higher game. The Tribune had none of its friends in office; so, when the soulless New-York farmer returned, he said he saw nothing dishonest in the conduct of Hall, and helped to defend the latter as Mayor, and only a "fawning spirit" in PETER B. SWEENEY. How innocently instructive!

The Tribune now refers to its circulation, and drones about having done its best to help the great popular upheaval in New-York in Nineteen hundred. What may have been the Tribune's case in this instance, does not seem to differ much from the record of any of the Ring journals. It was almost silent in denouncing fraud while publishing Tammany advertisements. Mayor HALL still made it an ally. Now, but before publishing its answer run the risk of payment. Had the Tribune been accused by its old spirit, it would not be in its present plight. The truth is, the Tribune is not what it was. It has all the vices of a well-paid reformer and nothing of its virtues. Two years ago it was quite an opinion upon public affairs, public affairs with it being narrowed down to sentiment opposition to the present occupant of the White House and his friends. To stab the reputation of a public man not agreeing with its vagaries, would seem to be a pleasure. Misrepresentation of the motives of people quite as good as itself is the matter on which the Tribune is fully positive. Even its best friends are sick of its personal quarrels and vain abuse, in which they have no interest. They think the Tribune cannot fall much lower in influence. They know no one connected with it can be President. And if they should even be so foolish as to nominate a favorite in its sanctum, they would be adding fuel to its fire. In City when delinged with corruption, they swoon to sneer at its offensive pollutions in other things, and, moreover, they will watch the progress of its advertising account, much out by it as a reformer, when presenting for settlement to Controller Green.

ROSS TWEED IN JOURNALISM.

From Our Own Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, Saturday, Feb. 17, 1872.

In the month of November, 1870, a few patriots and anti-Corruptionists of the great Democracy, feeling the importance of establishing at the seat of Government a national organ, which, by a bold advocacy of the principles of their time-honored party, would wrest the reins of power from the hands of disorganized political foes, concluded, after mature deliberation, to publish a paper for the accomplishment of these, their long-cherished purposes. The capital stock of the enterprise was fixed at one hundred thousand dollars in shares of one thousand dollars each, and the names of the subscribers are herein given, that some of them may yet smile above the pages of a paper in which they have so often been established in the public gaze. In presenting them once more to our readers, it will be observed that he with whom they are the most familiar heads the list, as well for infamy as for the amount subscribed.

William M. Tweed, the shrewd and not-so-honest politician, ...	$25,000
E. C. Cornelius, formerly connected with a small bank, ...	2,000
Richard Schell, old Hunker Democrat, ...	2,000
James A. Hooker, banker, of New-York, ...	5,000
Rufus Smith, the "Ring man," brother-in-law of Tweed, the manager, ...	4,000
J. E. Harvey, the great double back-action, revolving-bottom, virtuous and experienced editor, ...	5,000
James G. McGuire, Ex-Mayor of Washington, ...	5,000
Lawrence Riggs, of Baltimore, the W. W. Corcoran, the great banker of Washington, who, it is stated, having bribed Congress a large claim, did not deem it politic to appear as a stockholder in the Ash Pole Guano concern, ...	15,000
George W. Riggs, banker, of Washington, ...	5,000
Richard Wallach, Collector of Internal Revenue, ...	2,000
James O. McGuire, Keyworth Faithfulness, ...	1,000
Three Members of Congress from the City of Baltimore, ...	3,000
[illegible]	4,000
O. G. Harris, one of the assistant editors of the Tribune, ...	[illegible]
And three other individuals unknown to fame, $1,000 each, ...	3,000
Total	[illegible]

The managers of the organ consisted of three trustees, viz.: Messrs. HARVEY, HARRIS and BURNAY. This distinguished trio conducted the paper in orthodox style until the month of September in the following year, when HARVEY was superseded by Gen. NOAH L. JEFFERIS. His reign, however, was short, if not glorious, for in two months time he yielded the tripod and retired, with his usual grace, from editorial honors.

About the 1st of November, 1871, the great CORCORAN conceived the idea that this celebrated journal was not sufficiently rapid in enforcing his personal grievances, (of which rumor declares he has many,) and forthwith this money king concluded to change the management. At the annual meeting for the election of trustees but a small proportion of the stock was represented. Col. BURNAY, the Treasurer, submitted a financial report, the character of which may be determined from the fact he then and there, for the assets and good will of the concern, offered the modest sum of sixty thousand dollars. This proposition was not acted upon by Mr. CORCORAN and his friends, an adjournment being proposed and carried, with a view, as we stated, to secure a larger representation of stock.

Just here it becomes our duty to say the old adage of "honor among thieves" "went under." It is fair to presume, however, that by constant use it had completely worn away. These immaculate paper patriots, with a full knowledge that the stock was worth sixty-five cents on the dollar, journeyed to New-York City, and through the agency, it is said, of prominent Democratic Congressmen, induced the great "Boss TWEED" to dispose of his stock to the aforesaid CORCORAN for thirty-three cents on the dollar—one-half of its cash value as they well knew. It might be suggested by some that there is a sort of retributive justice in the plucker being plucked; but all fair-minded men (who to be such must of course believe that one rogue should not steal from another) will, we are sure, agree that such a proceeding was hardly the square thing.

The stock of the patriot and anti-corruptionist TWEED having been thus secured by the Croesus of the concern, an adjourned meeting of the stockholders was held on or about the 25th day of November, 1871. There were present W. W. Corcoran, Senators Cassserly and Stockton, Jas. C. McGuire, Richard T. Merrick, J. B. Harvey, J. G. Berret, O. K. Harris, N. L. Jeffries, and last, but not least, a gentleman from New-York, named PHILIP, who, from time immemorial, has striven for congressional honors in the Fourth-respite district, but who, although Colossus-like, straddling two places of residence, has been refused office by both. PHILIP attended the first meeting as the representative of MANNICK, whose stock, rumor asserts, has never been paid; but persons who intimately know this man of dust honors desire that he could have full no scruples in assuming to vote from a circumstance so slight.

When the voting for trustees began, two tickets (like SHAKESPEARE's Rosencrantz were found to be in the field, viz.: The old tickets, represented by BURNAY, JEFFERIS and HARRIS, and the new ticket, by MERRICK, MCGUIRE and PHILIP—the latter being the candidates of the venerable CORCORAN. The result of the contest need hardly be told; for CORCORAN holding his own and the great TWEED's stock, and one or two proxies besides, and the incorruptible COLNOLLY being present by no less a dignified proxy than CASSERLY, the Democratic Senator from the Golden State, the great banker's side received a preponderance of the votes, and thus it was that CORCORAN won and BURNAY fell.

Having accomplished his ends, Mr. CORCORAN embarked for Europe, leaving the management of the paper to PHILIP, MERRICK and MAGUIRE. Dissensions, however, seem not to have been avoided by their gentle rule, and on the 12th of January Mr. HARRIS tendered his resignation as managing editor of the paper, for the reason that the trustees were continually interfering with him, and that his own and their views were so much at variance that he could not consistently carry out their orders. The trustees arbitrarily marked out a course which Mr. HARRIS did not think he could carry out without a sacrifice of all personal and journalistic independence.

Mr. HARRIS denied that when the trustees were appointed it was ever intended that they should assume the powers of direct control over the columns of the paper, which they had assumed. It is also intimated that the trustees have made the paper subservient and secondary to other business pursuits; and that they have excluded publications because they were supposed to interfere with somebody's social relations.

Mr. HARRIS stated that Mr. PHILIP told him that certain things must not be published about certain men, no matter what the facts or the proof might be, because he is on intimate social relations with the parties mentioned. In another case Mr. HARRIS was prohibited from making a publication because one of the trustees happened to be the counsel of a party charged with crime. Their whole course was and is to make the paper subservient to personal and private ends.

Opening of the Metropolitan Museum of Art.

The Trustees of the Metropolitan Museum of Art have much cause for their opening reception, to be given to the subscribers to the fund, on Tuesday evening next. As the accommodations at their disposal are somewhat limited, they have, in order to avoid too great a crowding of their rooms on that evening, and also to give those who preferred it an opportunity of viewing the pictures, first by daylight, arranged to have the gallery opened on Wednesday, from 9 A. M. to 5 P. M., only to holders of invitations to the reception. On Thursday, and daily thereafter, except on Sundays and Mondays, the gallery will be open to the holders of tickets obtainable from subscribers only.

Fortsch Case—The Court of Appeals to be Asked for a Fine at Freeholders.

The general impression prevailed that when Judges INGRAHAM and BARNARD denied FORTSCH's motion for a new trial, the stay of proceedings granted by Judge PIERRE, at Brooklyn, had over and gave FORTSCH's counsel ample time to make their last effort in an argument before the Court of Appeals at Albany. This, however, is not the case; on Wednesday FORTSCH will be resentenced to death, and the only power that can save him, other than Executive clemency, will be the granting of a stay of execution by the Court of Appeals. The papers intended for using about the delicate state of affairs for FORTSCH are now being prepared, and will be submitted on Friday or Thursday next.

SPAIN AND SOUTH AMERICA.

Suspension of Technical Hostilities Between the Allied Pacific Republics and Spain—Peace Made Substantial.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 18.—The following is the text of the armistice between Spain and the South American Republics, which a cable telegram recently stated had been published in the Official Gazette at Madrid:

The plenipotentiaries of Spain and of the allied Republics of South America met at the Department of State, in Washington, on the 15th of April, 1871, and agreed upon the following:

Articles of Armistice between Spain and the Allied Republics, Bolivia, Chili, Ecuador and Peru on the other.

The mediation of the United States having been offered and accepted toward reducing Spain and the allied Republics of the Pacific from the technical state of war which has existed since the beginning of 1866, the President of the United States had for this purpose conferred full powers upon HAMILTON FISH, Secretary of State. His Catholic Majesty has conferred like powers on MARIANO ROMERO, Knight Grand Cross of the Royal Order of Isabel the Catholic, Knight General Cross of the Order of Christ of Portugal, Grand Officer of the Order of the Conception of Vasmonsa and of Leopold of Belgium, Knight Commander of the Legion of Honor of France, Superior Chief of Administration, Deputy in various Legislatures, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of His Majesty AMADEO I., King of Spain, to the United States of America. The President of the Republic of Bolivia has conferred like powers on Col. MANUEL PAGNI, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of Peru to the United States of America. The President of the Republic of Chili has conferred like powers on JOAQUIN GODOY, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of that Republic to the United States of America. The President of the Republic of Ecuador has conferred like powers on ANTONIO FLOREZ, a Senator of that Republic and Minister Plenipotentiary, and the President of the Republic of Peru has conferred like powers on Col. MANUEL PAGNI, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of that Republic to the United States of America, and the said Plenipotentiaries having exchanged their full powers, which were found in due and proper form, have agreed upon the following articles:

ARTICLE 1. The suspension of hostilities existing de facto between Spain on the one hand and the allied Republics of Bolivia, Chili, Ecuador and Peru on the other, is converted into a formal armistice or truce, which shall continue indefinitely, and cannot be broken by any of the belligerents, save in three years after having expressly and explicitly notified the other of its intention to resume hostilities, which notice must in every case be made through the Government of the United States.

ART. 2. Each of the belligerents during the continuance of this armistice shall be at liberty to carry on commerce with neutral nations in all articles which trade is considered lawful in a state of peace, a restriction on neutral commerce, therefore, ceasing.

ART. 4. The present agreement shall be ratified by the respective Governments, and the instruments of ratification shall be exchanged at the Department of State of Washington, within four months from date.

ART. 5. These Governments which shall not have sent their ratification within the time fixed in the preceding article may notify the exchange separately in the two months following.

ART. 6. If any one of the Governments, on account of circumstances over which it has no control, shall not be able to send its ratification of the stipulations within the times fixed in the foregoing articles, a delay shall be granted it as it may request from the other party without the necessity for a new agreement.

ART. 7. The proceedings for the ratification and exchange shall not interfere with the continuation of the conferences designed for the negotiation of a peace.

In testimony of the stipulations made in the foregoing seven articles the undersigned, Secretary of State of the United States in the character of mediator, and the Plenipotentiaries of Spain, Bolivia, Chili, Ecuador and Peru, have signed the foregoing agreement at the Department of State at Washington on the 11th day of April, 1871.

Plenipotenciario del Ecuador.

Plenipotenciario de Bolivia.

The Treaty.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

The article by President WOOLSEY, copied in your paper of yesterday from the Independent, is worthy of careful perusal as a fair and candid statement of the points at issue between Great Britain and the United States, regarding the proper construction of the Treaty of Washington in respect to the "Alabama claims." Some considerations, however, bearing on this construction seem to have escaped the attention of the very able and conscientious writer of that article, or at least are not as clearly and prominently brought out by him as they deserve to be.

Dr. WOOLSEY is clearly right in the doctrine that unless the "indirect" claims for loss of commerce, increased rates of insurance and protraction of the war are included in the submission to arbitration in the first article of the treaty, they are not bound by the award under the provisions of article 11. The latter article provides that the award shall be a "full, perfect and final settlement of all the claims hereinbefore referred to," and that "every such claim" shall be "finally settled, barred and thenceforth inadmissible." Now, in all seriousness, that if the claim for "indirect" losses has not been by the treaty submitted to arbitration, it is in no manner barred or settled by the award.

But it is impossible to believe that it was the intention of the Joint High Commissioner of their respective Governments in failing in the proviso for a settlement only of a portion of the claims in issue between the two Governments, leaving these claims, to which their attention had been most explicitly called, and which had given rise to so much heated recrimination and angry debate wholly unprovided for. Especially is it impossible to believe this in view of the special in the first article of the treaty that the submission to the tribunal of arbitration is made "in order to remove and adjust all complaints and claims on the part of the United States, and to provide for the speedy settlement of such claims."

AGAIN, Dr. WOOLSEY truly asserts that the only points of strength on the British side of the question is to be found in the language of article 10, and the argument based thereon of the representatives of the British Government in rejecting these indirect losses, "as to each vessel," pursuant to the provisions of the article. There is great force in the suggestion that such an apportionment of injuries or liability among the several vessels would be substantially impracticable, and could never have been contemplated by the members of the Joint High Commission or of their respective Governments.

But, conceding, for the argument's sake, to its fullest extent, the doctrine of the British Government, or, rather, of the British Press and parliamentary orators, as to the construction of article 10, in this regard, and the powers of the Board of Arbitration in the premises, I find in it no argument against the inclusion of the indirect claims in the submission to the Board of Arbitration by Articles 1 and 7, but rather a construction and support of the American doctrine on that subject.

For it must be borne in mind that article 10, with the Board of Assessors provided for by it, is no part of the certain and necessary machinery of the settlement of the claims submitted. It is only upon a certain contingency that the article is to be resorted to at all, or the Board of Assessors provided by it to be brought into use.

By article 9, the Board of Arbitrators is authorized to award "a sum in gross to be paid by Great Britain to the United States for all the claims referred to it." And it is only "in case the Tribunal (of arbitration) finds that Great Britain has failed to fulfill every duty or obligation as aforesaid, and does not award a sum in gross," that the Board of Assessors is to be appointed to pass upon specific claims.

Adopting, therefore, fully the British claim of construction of article 10, by which the powers of Assessors is deferred till all jurisdiction is passed upon the "indirect" claims, the provisions of the treaty stand simply in this wise:

By article 1 all the claims of the United States against Great Britain generically known as the Alabama claims, and which, declaration, as shown by Dr. WOOLSEY, includes the "indirect" as well as the "direct" claims, are submitted to the Tribunal of Arbitration.

By article 7 that tribunal is authorized to award "a sum in gross to be paid by Great Britain to the United States for all the claims referred to it," which sum in gross may include such amount as the Board of Arbitrators may see fit to award on account of indirect losses.

If the Board of Arbitrators, while holding Great Britain in fault and liable for the direct losses, shall not deem the indirect losses allowable, they need not and shall not choose to pass upon the question of assessing the direct losses, they may then send the matter to the Board of Assessors with power in them to pass only upon specific and direct losses traceable directly to each separate vessel.

This construction seems to me so harmonious with the phraseology of the treaty, and so plainly to express its true intent as a whole. It explains, too, the stress laid in the "American case" on the argument in favor of the awarding of a gross sum by the arbitrators, which would otherwise seem to be a matter of detail merely, and without substantial importance.

The suggestion is made not as in any respect conflicting with the views expressed by Dr. WOOLSEY, which commend themselves to my full approval, but by way of following out certain lines of argument which were perhaps suggested, but not fully discussed, by him.

Music.

THE SEASON OF ENGLISH OPERA.

The two weeks' sojourn of the Parepa-Rose English Opera Troupe at the Academy of Music terminated this Saturday evening's performance, at which "Fra Diavolo" was the opera, and Mr. CHARLES SANTLEY the attraction. For the third time since Monday, Mr. SANTLEY drew an immense audience. His pronunciation of Fra Diavolo afforded great diversion, and repeated evidences of the delight produced by his singing, day of the September week by his easy and refined actors, were not wanting. We think that the familiarity of the assemblage with ARDITI's music contributed largely to the increased charm of the last representation in which Mr. SANTLEY took part. In "Elijah" the gentleman showed an intense earnestness and force for which there is no room in the character of the bandit chief as SCRIBE limned it, and for the absence of which a picturesque, though conventional, lightness and elegance would atone. Without mistaking Mr. SANTLEY's undoubted merits for dark wardrobes, or his repose for unintelligence as to the requirements of the title he sills, it is more the less positive that his persons of Fra Diavolo is rather commonplace. It may be held that it is a great deal more natural than that to which we have become accustomed, for students to be sought in opera-comique, and amid ceremonies like those which the Marchesa has supplied to Alvano, the attire and the manners of an English gentleman have a very strange air. Neither in his dealings with Zerlina, whom he adds a chapter to the story she tells of the feats of the lawless shieldsin, nor in his love-passages with Lady Allcash, nor in his handling of his ruffianly companions, nor in the grand scene at the opening of the third act—which is a small drama in itself—did Mr. SANTLEY suggest to us, we will not say the leader of bandits we have been used to, but a being at all approaching the musician's ideal. At times, we are bound to say, the public expressed by its applause an opinion differing from that which we entertain, and the arts last mentioned, he is reasonable variety of its delivery, elicited a token of unequivocal approval. Most of the plaudits, however, were intended for Mr. SANTLEY's singing. This we have too frequently written of, to feel now compelled to speak of it at length. It is, in brief, perfection. With the interpretation resulting from the skilled use of a magnificent voice, and an unceasing display of science and good taste in the reading of the notes, it was only to be anticipated that all the well-known numbers of the opera would be redemanded. Satisfaction almost as frequent was afforded by the efforts of Mme. VAN ZANDT, who is not a very sympathetic Zerlina, but who showed herself a painstaking and correct vocalist; by those of Mrs. ZELDA SEGUIN, who was almost too fascinating—save in point of dress—as Lady Allcash, and by the comicalities of the two brigands, embodied respectively by Messrs. CAMPBELL and HALL. We were not surprised at the mediocrity of the representative of Lorenzo, and no veteran among opera-goers could have shared the sentiment of astonishment apparent among many of the spectators of that personage's achievements. The band, under Mr. DERRIKS, and the chorus, were full, and precise in their work. Mr. SANTLEY and all the performers were called before the curtain at the end of the rehearsal, which, by its numerous excellences and its effect, brought a capital season to a fitting close.

BRIEF MENTION.

The farewell performances of Miss NILSSON in Italian opera are to be commenced at the Academy of Music on today fortnight. Miss NILSSON departs for Europe on April 20, and her marriage, we have reason to believe, will be solemnized soon after her arrival.....The brief season of German opera at the Grand Opera-house will begin this evening with a performance of NICOLAI's setting of "The Merry Wives of Windsor"....We again remind music-loving as well as philanthropic readers that the concert to which Miss KELLOGG, Miss MORSER, and other artists, are to lend their attractiveness, for the greater prosperity of the Zenana schools in India, occurs at Steinway Hall to-night....A Dannreuth-Prudhomme concert may be enjoyed in Steinway's smaller hall this evening.....Mr. W. J. HILL announces a concert for Tuesday evening next. It will be given at Steinway Hall, and will enlist the services of Mme. Anna Martinez, Miss Sterling, Miss Barron and Signor Sarasate, and of Messrs. Pattison, Gilbert, Thatcher, Hill, Bailu, Neumeria and Dachauer.....A concert in aid of the Society of the Fraternals will be given at the Church of the Strangers on Thursday next. The affair will be under the direction of Mr. J. R. Thomas, and Miss Vienna Demorest, Mme. de Rayther, Signorina Filomeno and Miss Annie L. Downing will co-operate in it.

A STRUGGLE FOR LIFE.

Terrible Accident on the Ice—Eight Persons in the Water—All Mysteriously Rescued.

From Our Own Correspondent.

MONTICELLO, Sullivan County, N. Y., Saturday, Feb. 17, 1872.

The little settlement Albert Black Lake, in the town of Bethel, this county, was thrown into the most intense excitement, a few days since, by one of the most thrilling occurrences ever witnessed. The whole village was congregated for a time around the shores of the lake, while three men, two little girls and three lads were struggling for life several rods from shore, some having broken through the ice, and others jumping in to render them aid. The circumstances which led to the occurrence are as follows, related by one who was an eye-witness:

Black Lake is located in a wild spot, there being there being employed on an extensive tannery and their families. The tannery is built near the lake, getting its water power therefrom. About 4 o'clock on a recent afternoon, two little girls, about twelve years, and named HATTIE SCHOMAKER and HELEN BROOK, started home from a neighbor's where they had been spending the day. To make a short journey, they started across the ice on the lake, just above the tannery. When within a few rods of the opposite shore, the little SCHOMAKER girl broke through the ice, and at once sank to about ten feet of water. Fortunately she came up in the aperture, and her companion at once went to help her out, but as she was pulling her up, she herself slipped in. The two girls threw their arms about each other, and sank below the surface. This sad sight was witnessed by a lad named THOMAS BERRY. He was working a short distance from the pond, and immediately ran to the spot where the girls had disappeared. Upon reaching it he saw them beneath the water, still clinging together, and he laid down on the ice to reach them. While reaching down, the ice gave way beneath him, and he was plunged in the water. He turned his attention to the little girls, however, and endeavored to raise them up. Finding that it would be impossible to do so unless they could be separated, he shouted for assistance. A man named MAX DEGEER, who was working in the woods, heard his cries, and ran down to the lake. Seeing the perilous situation of the boy, who was struggling nobly to keep the two girls afloat, notwithstanding that they were clinging to him, and thus incumbering him, he rushed to his assistance. No sooner had he arrived at the spot, than the ice broke beneath him, and he was added to the number in the water. The girls now let go of young BERRY, and caught hold of DEGEER's coat. He found no difficulty in keeping them afloat, but his little son, who had been with him at his work, doubtless frightened at his father's situation, ran and jumped into the water, and clambered upon him, clasping him about the neck. The employes of the tannery, and the women and children of the settlement were by this time witnesses to the scene by the cries of those in the water, and a fearful panic ensued. Several women fainted, and were carried away, while cries and prayers succeeded on every side. Death seemed inevitable to the struggling ones in the water. JAMES BROOKS, a partner of one of the little girls, ran out to the edge of the ice to help his sister, when he was precipitated into the water, and almost immediately thereafter JAMES KILEARY, another lad, fell in while endeavoring to rescue Mr. BROOKS. He got out of the consideration of his little boy, by getting him in his arms, and leaning him out on the ice, where he was eagerly seized by a strong hands. The girls were now nearly exhausted. The little SCHOMAKER girl's grasp on DEGEER relaxed and she sank below the surface. DEGEER was evidently becoming weary from his struggles with the girls, and could with difficulty keep afloat. The men that stood around assisted glued to the spot with terror. When the SCHOMAKER girl sank young KILEARY made a desperate effort and drew himself up on the opposite side of the ice, where it was strongest, and at once shouted to some one on shore to run to the tannery and get him a rope. A strong fellow was sent for, having broke out of water. It was some time before he could make them understand, but finally a man started on a run to the tannery. Before KILEARY got out, however, THOMAS BERRY, father of the lad who had rushed to the aid of the girls at first, and who had been in the water some minutes, dragged the failing condition of DEGEER, who passed in and relieved him of a part of his burden. In the meantime the man had arrived with the tannery hook, and young KILEARY took it, and grasped the body of the SCHOMAKER girl as she came to the surface, and commenced making for the third time. He succeeding in drawing her lifeless form upon the ice, and she was taken to a neighboring house, and thought to be dead. She was resuscitated, however, after a long and unceasing trial. Soon after she was taken out, THOMAS HARLEY, a cool and resolute young man, came in from the woods. Seeing the trouble, instantly rushed for the hole where there were now five persons struggling for life. BERRY was supporting DEGEER, who held in his arms the unconscious form of HELEN BROOKS. The boy BERRY was still able to keep himself above the water, and JAMES BROOKS was holding on to the edge of the ice, too numb and near exhausted to raise himself out. When HARLEY started to jump in to aid them, some in the crowd attempted to stop him, saying, "For God's sake, HARLEY, there's enough in there to drown you." He shook them off, and obtaining two more hooks and a plank to be brought to the hole, jumped in. He divided his assistance between the five—supporting one for a time, and then another, until the plank and hooks arrived. He then gave directions how to use them, and, in a very short time, all were taken out. The little girl was, like her companion, thought to be dead, but restoratives brought her back to consciousness. The two girls still lie in a very precarious condition, but all the others have recovered from the effects of their terrible bath.

REAL ESTATE TRANSACTIONS.

At the Exchange on Saturday, Feb. 17, James M. Miller, by order of the Supreme Court, foreclosure, under the direction of Wm. Brighton, Esq., referee, sold a one-half undivided interest in seven lots of land located on the south side of One Hundred and Twenty-first-street, 400 feet east of Avenue A, having a front on the street of 175 feet, and a river-front of about 116 feet. The mortgage foreclosed, amounted, with interest, costs, &c., to $16,500, and the half interest in the property sold for $8,250 over and above this sum, making the total price paid $14,100, thus fixing the actual value of the plot at $28,200—a million lots square. The purchaser at the sale was JAMES M. BOYD. The legal sale of a valuable lot on One Hundred and Fifteenth-street, near Fourth-avenue, by A. J. BLEECKER, SON & CO., expected also to occur, was adjourned until Tuesday next.

LAST WEEK'S SUMMARY.

During the past week the transactions consummated at the Exchange have not only been numerous, but of unusual importance, and the aggregate of sales realized for real estate, disposed of the largest for a single week since last Spring. Nearly all the sales held have also resulted favorably, and the market at the present time presents more of the firmness that has been the case for months. In regard to property throughout the City, there is a much better feeling, and a confidence in the future is freely expressed. The most important sale of the week was that conducted by MULLER, WILKINS & CO., on Tuesday, Feb. 13, at which some 200 lots belonging to the estate of DANIEL DEVERES, deceased, located on the west side of the City and situate on the Boulevard and One Hundred and Thirty-fifth-street and vicinity, were sold at first-rate figures, the total of the sale reaching nearly the sum of $200,000. E. H. LUDLOW & CO. also conducted an important auction at the Exchange on Thursday, Feb. 15, disposing of sixty-three lots and gores of land forming the estate of Frances Benkemus, deceased, and located on Forty-ninth and Fiftieth streets, west of Tenth-avenue, for about $130,000 in the aggregate. Numerous other sections of minor importance have, in addition, been successfully consummated by other well-known auctioneers, so that the total value of City real estate sold at the Exchange for the week ending Feb. 17, amounts, to $1,628,026, as against the sum of $974,000, the figures for the previous week. The amount of property sold at private sale has also been larger, and the recorded transfers of the week are of unusual note. We will be seen by a reference to our usual weekly list, published to-morrow.

PRIVATE SALES AND OTHER MATTERS.

At private sale, Wm. H. Hayhoe, No. 84 Pine-street, reports having sold two full lots on the south-west corner of Broadway, Sixth-avenue and Thirty-third-street, with four five-story brick houses thereon, rented at the rate of $9,000 per annum, for $150,000; also four lots on the south side of One Hundred and Fifteenth-street, 100 feet west of Morningside-avenue, for $19,000. Isaac Honig, No. 25 Pine-street, also reports the sale by Wm. P. Seymour of a plot of ground 100 by 100 feet on the south-east corner of Sixth-avenue and Twenty-third-street, for $220,000, an advance of $10,000 on the price recently paid for the plot as sold by Mr. Honig; also the sale of two lots on the north side of Eighty-ninth-street, 102 feet east of Fifth-avenue, for $31,000, an advance of $4,000 on the price at which the property was sold a month ago. As an application of the advance in this class of real estate the same broker mentions the following facts in regard to a plot of ground, 100X140, situate on the north-west corner of Fifth-avenue and One Hundred and Fifteenth-street: The lots were sold in 1845, 1853, by Mr. Honig, for $15,000, resold June 28, 1870, for $26,000, resold April 28, 1871, for $38,000, resold on the 6th inst. for $50,000, and an offer of $51,000, as stated, has since been refused.

We had designed at the present time to say something in reference to rents for the present season, but space forbids it in a few general remarks. As to the exact state of the market in this particular, it is difficult to make a definite statement, for while in many instances a reduction has been made on last year's figures, in others, and especially in desirable business property, there is but little change. Houses rented will probably be very fair, but if stored in these a good house in a first-class neighborhood will, as always, command a fair interest upon the investment. Like everything else, supply and demand control business, and when the house-hunter finds exactly the dwelling he desires at a price mutually satisfactory to the landlord and the tenant is generally agreed upon.

The attention of those seeking an investment or suburban property is called to that located at Whitestone, Long Island, and offered by Jonson & Miller, No. 26 Nassau-street, on very favorable terms. The enterprise is one which should command confidence, as from our own knowledge the property is all that it is represented.

THIS WEEK'S PROPOSED SALES.

For the present week the auctions noted below are projected, some of which are of special interest. Nearly all the sales, however, as will be seen, take place to-morrow and Wednesday, for WASHINGTON'S birthday, occurring on Thursday, so business will be on that day transacted. For the balance of the week the market will be quiet. The following is a list of the proposed sales, and on the days specified. Real estate will be offered at the Exchange by the auctioneers respectively named:

Midland Railroad

FIRST MORTGAGE

7 Per Cent. Gold Bonds,

LIMITED TO $16,000 PER MILE ON EXTENDED ROAD.

The rapid progress toward completion of the great through Line from New-York to the West and to Canada, enables us to offer an investment at PAR AND INTEREST a bonus that will make it one of the most favorite securities.

Upward of 100 miles of this road, including the New-Jersey portion, are already finished, equipped, and in operation, and contracts with responsible parties have been made for its finishing to completion by the first day of July next. When this shall have been accomplished the advantages will fall to the large and highly remunerative, as it has connections at least equal to those of any of the competitors for both local and through business. It is building for cash, of which nearly $1,000,000 here been furnished by subscription, in its stock of PAR. The work is substantial, and, including equipment, has not exceeded in cost $60,000 per mile, which is less than one-third of the amount at which some of the trunk lines of roads leading from New-York are capitalized, and on which their are paying good dividends.

In view of these facts, the Midland First Mortgage Bonds must be regarded as a first-class security—they are sold at Government rates, and by making the exchange at the present difference in price, holders of Midland Bonds will realize 33 per cent. more of revenue upon the amount invested than the holders of Government Bonds.

A congregation filling in every part its vast spaces, attended at the Church of the Messiah, (Unitarian,) yesterday morning, to listen to Rev. ROBERT COLLYER, of Chicago. He chose for his text the thirty-second verse of the twelfth chapter of Luke: "Fear not, little flock, for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the Kingdom." Said the speaker: It is the most natural thing in the world, I think, for men and women in our position, to ask themselves now and then what reasons can be given for the stand they take in religion, that sets them apart from the great majority of their fellow-worshipers in the Christian Church. In the whole length of the time that has come and gone since the question first came into the arena, "Which is the truth—this that we hold to be the Gospel of God, or that which those hold who call us heretics?" our confessors have had to bear the brunt of a never-ending battle. It has not been a battle between armies about equal in numbers, but on the one side a countless host, and on the other, for at least 1,400 years, a small handful. And then their army has not only been immense in point of numbers, but very much superior in drill and discipline to ours, and in a willingness to unite under its commanders and fight as they are bidden. It has acted mainly, also, on what in the military sense, may be called the offensive, while the smaller host has done very little beside clinging to its fortunes, has not done anything by comparison for united and intelligent action, and has been very often in the condition of the French Army before the first Revolution, when the officers outnumbered the men they had to command, though most of the commanders did nothing but draw their pay and keep out of danger. It has been the fortune of all the other divisions of the Church of God that date very far back, to pass through their wilderness of trial and isolation in the course of time to the Canaan of rest and peace. The speaker reviewed the early struggles of the Episcopal, Puritan and Methodist Churches in England, and said: Methodism rests now in the sunshine of universal favor; its leaders in England, he believed, are sometimes consulted by Government. Politicians in America count its favor one of the best chances for a place, rent the best pews in its churches and give its eminent men their choicest countenance; and one of the leading bishops of the Episcopal Church in this country told a friend of the speaker's last Winter that one great business of his life is to unite the Methodist and Episcopal churches and make them one. To be a Methodist now is to be in good fellowship with the whole Protestant Church, as it is also to be a Baptist over Presbyterian or an Orthodox Quaker. This has spoiled the fortune at last of all the great divisions of the Church on that side. But it has been our fortune to stand to this moment in a perpetual isolation. Except for the fellowship Universalism has offered to what is called our right wing, neither good wishes nor good will has ever appeared toward us, except here and there some one or more of our church will exchange a Christian courtesy as the boys in the war on both sides would exchange canteens of or compliments at the outpost of their camps, and then stood ready to shoot at each at the tap of the drum. "He is a very good man," a friend said to him lately, speaking of a Chicago pastor, "if he would only quit abusing Unitarians, but that he never will do." "I would like very much to exchange pulpits with you," more than one orthodox preacher has volunteered to say, "but my people are not quite ripe for it yet." We take comfort now and then, at our Sundays in telling each other how this and that church is all the time becoming more liberal, and will break down party walls presently, and we shall be all one. He thought men and women in the churches will do that, but not, he feared, the churches themselves. Dean Stanley said to the disciple of our faith, who was selected for his scholarship to sit at the revision of the English Bible, "Come to the sacrament with us and welcome, if you will, it is your Lord's table as well as mine," but then the English Church sent up a howl of wrath that an avowed Unitarian should be permitted in such company. We hear now and then, of some other minister in our own country, who will give the government to a man as knows to be Unitarian, but nine times out of ten that man pays for one of the best pews in the church, and it is known that he gives no trouble. "My son," a Baptist mother said to her only son when he went to New-England last year to see her, "you are the only child I have, and I nursed you at my breast, but I would rather see you in your grave than see you in Unity Church, where I understand you are going to hear Mr. COLLYER." Alluding to the Orthodox denominations, he said he might easily take his hearers back step by step clean to the spring-head of what is now a great river to the first gathering of the great away we cannot with a good conscience join, because we believe that neither adopt its ideas nor its spirit; and we should find the every step as we lighted on some great man who made his age illustrious by his presence in it, and drew the finest thinkers of his era to his side, that he still had to feel he could have no sort of fellowship inside the Christian Church at large, but to keep to the little band who could never be other than Unitarian, and make himself of no reputation if he would be true to the truth of God as it burned and shone in his own soul. He quoted CHANNING, and said that, priestly, for his intellectual and moral and acquisitions, BUCKMINSTER says, is to be placed at the head of the learned men of the last century; and so of PRICE and LINDSAY, SAMUEL CLARKE, NATHANIEL LARDNER, and many more of the finest and purest thinkers and men in the labor history of the Church. Once sure that they were preachers of the truth, and are yet to tell that the door of the great Christian fellowship was shut in their faces. Neither Independent nor Episcopalian nor Baptist nor Methodist could touch their hand in a Christian fellowship. They came to their ways alone with the little band that dared take Christ at his word when he said: My Father is greater than I. But with this long story of the little flock in lonesome places there is another to tell of the marvelous persistence in holding their fastness. God has committed to our care, keeping the lamp in our lighthouse alight, feeling somehow as many true souls have must have in order to light our battle at all, and welcomes to fellowship the kind against all its enemies in the annals of Christianity. This is not at all the result of any special endeavor. We have about as poor a faculty for enlisting recruits as for offering them any inducements except the truth we sell, and the freedom we charge for to join us. Not able as yet to train our children generally in our faith by the sweet home lessons they could never forget, any more than they can forget our love. Unwilling, sometimes, even to send them to our Sunday-schools, the superintendent of the Church, for fear something might befall them in casting our social influence very often sweetly and discreetly against our churches as for them; unable, many of us, to say a public prayer, except through our minister; careless about all changes of Christian intercourse, except once a Sunday; and then, sometimes, willing to be talked to, but never talking back, neglecting generally that mighty aid to a true devotion and a living church, congregational singing, and unable to strike a tune if the whole Unitarian future depended on it.

Necessity of Belief—Sermon by Rev. George H. Hepworth.

Yesterday morning Rev. Mr. HEPWORTH preached from the text, "Lord, I believe; help Thou mine unbelief." Mr. HEPWORTH, in the course of his sermon, said: "I am terribly alarmed to see in this community, the prevalence of a certain kind of unbelief. How many men in this world do realy believe all these things. Is there not a lingering shadow of a doubt which seems to take the life out of you. I am surprised at the prevalence of this unbelief—the want of faith—willful ignorance of whether they are so or are not so. In the olden times boys were catechised every day, perhaps over-drilled; the father saw himself that his boys had a proper theological foundation. We are now taking revenge upon the past; we are now careless, and live without any direct purpose, no definition to our belief; and what is the consequence? Whenever a terrible crime occurs, or a tempest of crime sweeps over the country, we do not shudder at it; we only prick up our ears and listen to what is said about it; we hear of things which poison men's minds and impair women's virtue. God forgive us! You ought to know better; you ought to know more of the bond between husband and wife, father and mother. These loose theories do not mean liberty but licentiousness. I would rather bring up my children in the creeds of any counsel that ever assembled to bring them up, than seen in religious matters. What am I? Am I simply a straw floating on the current of time, without aim or aspiration? Is there a God above me? Are you absolutely certain that God is right above you, in your life, interwoven in all your actions, that he follows you to your business, and guides while you buy and sell; Are you sure of it? Then you are not born yet. You are born into darkness. Where am I? Where I sleep breathing? Good God! is not this an important question? Think of this, dear friends. Twenty years from now the majority of these present will have closed their eyes in the mysterious dente. Ought we not to stand still and think about the future, and fix some definite shape? God has given us faculties what to do and how to do it—he tells you where to start and where you will go after death. If there is any other revelation in religion it is practically the same; and believe in God and his revelation, believe in God as he is, like a child with God at the helm; no matter what storm arises, the vessel is safe, anything, so long as your master is at the wheel, and your faith is unwavering, nothing will harm you, you ride the waves triumphantly, and at last arrive in the presence of your Father's mansion. Make your faith, then by it, not by it; that is religion that is Christianity.

At the conclusion of the sermon Mr. HEPWORTH announced that ground had been purchased on Fifth-avenue whereon to erect the new "Church of the Disciples." It is expected to be ready for use by next Autumn. It will cost 150,000 dollars.

VICES OF NEW-YORK.

Sermons of Rev. Mr. Newman—Fashionable Amusements—Theater-Going and Ball-Room Mischief.

Last evening a sermon was delivered at the Twenty-third-street Presbyterian Church, by Rev. R. D. NEWMAN, to a large congregation, the greater portion of which, it was noticeable, were young men and women, who seemed to be much interested throughout. After stating that it was especially important that he should deal with the subject of "the vices of New-York" in all candor and fairness, he remarked that we are all necessarily in need of something in the way of amusement and recreation. It is no sin to be happy; it is a sin to be perpetually miserable. Need of recreation and innocent enjoyment is a law of human nature. Amusements these have always been; but this is only the perversion of a want that is felt by every living man. The disposition of every one needs sweetening, needs brightening up; and to indulge in harmless pleasure is one method of doing it. It becomes, therefore, an important question what kind of amusements we shall have. How shall we deal with the young? How shall we meet this want? There are some amusements concerning the vileness of which there can be but one opinion. Nobody pretends to defend them on the ground of morality. Their badness is their capital, the very thing which makes them pay, and if they should turn respectable they would die. Some men say they are not injured by frequenting such places. Very true, and it is because they are so steeped in corruption that they cannot take any more in. On the other hand there are some amusements or entertainments concerning the purity and innocence of which there is likewise but one opinion. No evil thought is suggested, and they damage no one. The trouble lies in the intermediate ground. Some amusements may be stated as going, not in themselves, but through their surroundings, to lead about the poorest life that any man can. Another is that many amusements which are not sinful in themselves become sinful when carried to excess; and, further, we are required, sometimes, to give up that which is lawful in itself, if it is going to cause another to offend. A theatrical representation could be so constructed as to damage no one any more than listening to a dialogue recited by Sunday-school children; but theatres as a whole are not so clearly clean. There are some in this City in which men cannot sit and keep the purity of the mind, and be free from evil influences. His morals will decay, and he will be one step nearer perdition every time he enters the place. And so pernicious and contaminating is the general influence of the theatre in this and all other places that if the doors were shut to-morrow morning and nailed with spikes that would not break out until the day of doom, the morals of society would be improved, and religion would stand a thousand times better chance. Is there any exception? It might not unchristianize a man to witness Shakespearean play, but we have to consider whether by so doing we are neglecting important duties, becoming fascinated with a gay life, or leading others into the current of pleasure who would not stop until they have gone to the lowest pit in the City. As for dancing, it is not so harmful in itself as in what accompanies it, the excitement and the late hours which it involves. In concluding his remarks, Mr. NEWMAN made an earnest plea for those amusements which are purifying and elevating in their character.

The Modern Philosophy of Spiritualism—Lecture by Thomas Gales Forster, the Trance-Speaker.

A lecture was delivered yesterday morning by THOMAS GALE FORSTER, at Apollo Hall, on Spiritualism. The speaker took for his text Acts the seventeenth chapter and twenty-eighth verse—"For in Him we live and move and have our being. As certain also of your own poets have said—For we are also his offspring." St. Paul, said the lecturer, being an educated man of his time, and familiar with the literature of the day, doubtless referred in the latter part of the text to a poem in which occurs the following lines, as they have been translated:

"With Jove we must begin, nor from him love,
Him always praise, for all is full of Jove;
Jove's power fills all space, supholds this ball,
Allowed his aid, his power sustains us all;
For we his offspring are, and he, in love,
Points out to man his duty from above."

This poem, the preacher said, was written about 270 years before Christ, and clearly recognized the common fatherhood of God as a very one sentence in the whole range of Pagan literature. It is an illustration that proper ideas of the Deity were entertained long before the introduction of the Christian era—bearing likewise upon the idea which he sought to enforce, viz., that the manifestations of the ages, from the nature of their divine origin have ever been toward God—that man is naturally good, instead of being, as is alleged, totally depraved. Mr. FORSTER then referred to the inner and better qualities which make up a real life, and which form a true character. Effects of a character produce either upward manifestations of character, and cause the love and morality of one individual to seemingly differ from another, but inherently, love and morality are the same in every human soul, and endeavored to show themselves the same in all. He illustrated SWEDENBORG, and said that, priestly, for his intellectual and moral and acquisitions, BUCKMINSTER says, is to be placed at the head of the learned men of the last century; and so of PRICE and LINDSAY, SAMUEL CLARKE, NATHANIEL LARDNER, and many more of the finest and purest thinkers and men in the labor history of the Church. Once sure that they were preachers of the truth, and are yet to tell that the door of the great Christian fellowship was shut in their faces. LAFAYETTE-PLACE EXTENSION.

The Project for Opening Lafayette-Place—What Prominent Citizens Think of It.

To the Editors of The Times:

As the subject of selling some of the assessment in this case comes on before the Common Council, and the Committee on Streets are to report thereon today, we feel bound, our numbers being among the extensive, and by far a large number of our most prominent interests, to call your attention to the matter. The interests are about 100. Individually, all parties are interested, as it is proposed to put one-half the cost of the proposed extension on to the City. We trust our City authorities, who have full power to act, will not be so unwise as to do this. Still it is not the time to argue and submit reasons for its disapprobation.

NEW-YORK, Feb. 9, 1872.

To the Honorable Mayor, Aldermen and Citizens of the City of New-York:

We, the undersigned, owners of real estate in the City of New-York and whose interests will be adversely affected by the proposed extension of Lafayette-place, do protest against such extension and for the reasons given below; and we hereby pledge our property holdings to maintain and defend such action and the assessment herein proposed.

OBJECTIONS.

First—The extension is not in the interest of the general public, but is a mere local improvement, benefiting a few property owners, and is, in fact, destroying, by the proposed extension, the Washington-square, which is a great resort for the people of the City, and which, if improved, would be a great ornament to the City. The extension will take the most valuable portion of Washington-square, and will destroy the symmetry of the square, and will be a great injury to the City at large, and not particularly any local section.

Second—Should it ultimately be intended to open up Lafayette-place to Irving-place, this could not be done in a straight line, without going through the church yard, or at least of Lafayette-place, A. T. STEWART's and other very costly property.

Fourth—It, ultimately, a thoroughfare were desirable, and could be opened, it would be much better to open the lower part of the City, on the plan, by a comprehensive one, covering the whole subject and brought forward at a future time, when the City is free from debt and can afford to do it, and when the property owners have paid the expense of the present improvement. The extension now proposed involves the cutting through of but two blocks, and the outlay probably of $200,000 or $300,000.

Fifth—Should the question of rapid transit, and, at least a portion of the City will be required for it, the large debt now hanging over the City; the improvement of a character which are a necessity, which will be paid for by the property owners, for the objections above given, we pray you, honorable body to set aside this assessment, and for the reason that in the opinion of your honorable body the public interest and convenience do not demand it, and which is respectfully submitted.

There are some indications of slight disturbances south-east of Louisiana and also on the South Atlantic coast. The weather has been partly cloudy during Sunday from Lake Erie to Wisconsin, and southward to Arkansas and Georgia, with occasional light rain or snow. Clear weather and northerly winds have continued in New-England. The barometer has fallen on the Pacific Coast. The rivers have risen at Cincinnati, Nashville and Vicksburg.

Schnitzler's Centenary—A Great Hero.

The people of Munich have been celebrating the centenary of SENNEFELDER, the founder of lithography, and the Ministers and leading people of Germany's most art-loving city have taken their share in the commemoration.

SENNEFELDER was born at Prague, November, 1771, and died at Munich in 1834. He had just commenced the study of the law at Gottingen when his father died, and the res angusta domi compelled the young man to do something for a living. His father had succeeded as an actor, and young SENNEFELDER determined to try the same line, but utterly failed. He took to scribbling plays, and was more successful. Being often in press-rooms he was led to observe the art of printing, and ultimately mastered it.

After several attempts at high somewhat recall PALISSY's efforts in another direction, he set to invent a plan for taking off impressions of what he wrote, he was, like too many other inventors, indebted to an accident for the accomplishment of his aims. One day, when he had polished a stone plate for etching, his mother asked him to write a washing-bill. Not a scrap of paper was at hand, and he wrote the bill on the stone with a sort of chemical ink he had made for himself. Some time after it occurred to him, on looking at the stone, that by means of aquafortis and water he might etch the stone so as to leave the writing in sufficient relief for printing from it. The experiment succeeded, and as soon as he had brought this invention into practical form, he applied himself to the means of bringing it into operation, so as to gain a livelihood by it.

Being unable to raise the necessary funds otherwise, this energetic youth enlisted as a private of artillery as substitute for a friend who gave him $300. However, it seemed that he was again doomed to disappointment. On his return he found that, with the exception of his wife, it was discovered that he was not a native-born Bavarian, and therefore was ineligible for service without a special license.

However, this excursion was destined, notwithstanding, to be the making of him. By the assistance of his comrades, the Elector's band master, whom SENNEFELDER managed to interest in his scheme, his plans were tried, and the Elector sent him a hundred florins, and promised the printer an exclusive privilege of printing.

But many difficulties in the way of machinery and expense remained to be conquered, and SENNEFELDER deserves to be commemorated if only for the indomitable pluck and resolution which he displayed in the pursuit of his darling object. One such example is indeed worth one hundred thousand precepts against despair. In 1793, when only twenty-seven, he obtained an exclusive privilege for Bavaria, and carried on a considerable business, employing his two brothers and two apprentices, and in 1809 he was appointed—on the formation of a lithographic office, being formed for a survey of the kingdom—inspector of the royal lithographic establishment, with a salary of 1,500 florins, and permission to carry on his private business. He enjoyed this office until his death in 1834.

The Capture of an Escaped Convict in Brooklyn.

MICHAEL HURLEY, alias John Raymond, who is well known to the Police of this City, was arrested by Boardman GRAVE, at his house, corner of Washington and Water streets, yesterday afternoon. He was escaped from Sing Sing prison about fifteen months ago, in which place he had been sentenced by Recorder HACKETT for four years and six months, for grand larceny. He had some eighteen months of his time to serve, when he escaped. One hundred dollars reward was offered for his recapture, but up to yesterday he had contrived to elude the vigilance of the Police. He has been living in the place where he was captured for the past two months.

The New-York Juvenile Guardian Society.

The directors of this Society claim that the statements of fraud and mismanagement made against their Society are entirely false. They state the average attendance at their two schools to be 505 scholars. They also deny the statement that the Secretary, Mr. ROBINSON, owns real estate in New-Jersey or elsewhere, and that the various committees have examined into the affairs of the Society, and have declared it to be conducted upon the most economical plan. The amount stated as paid for interest in their annual report published in the TIMES of the 15th inst. should have been $1,700 00, instead of $7,700 00.

How "Hank" Smith Raised the Wind.

It will doubtless be fresh in the minds of readers of the TIMES that when "Hank" SMITH published his statement concerning the financial condition of the Bowling-green Savings Bank, among the items was the sum of $35,000 which he said had been subscribed by his friends of his legislature. Why these friends or days were should be of gubernor has been a mystery to most people, but yesterday the mystery was investigated. It appears that a large number of the depositors of the Bank were policemen and others holding offices under the City Administration, and it considerably protection of these men were induced to signover to him the whole of their deposits, while others, who had comparatively large sums deposited, were induced to subscribe for the fund. Those who refused to do this were specially set upon by those who held office under the Police Department, and were annoyed in consequence. Reinstatement and promotion have been dispensed in some instances even to Harlem. Such removals are very detrimental to the prospects of the poor beggars who have been so basely polluted their names are placed at the bottom of the list, so that their chances of promotion are remote. Instances were related to the reporter where men who have held low-grade places in some precinct, and who have received leaves to the Smith fund, have been immediately promoted, while others have been punished because those who subscribed to the fund have been placed to restore, because their consciences refused to subscribe to the fund. The Police as a body are indignant at this treatment, but, of course, they are forced to submit to it while the man, appointed the Presidential chair of the Police Commission.
